Dublin.—maritime co., Leinster, Ireland; is bounded N. by co. Meath, E. by the Irish Sea, S. by co. Wicklow, and W. by cos. Kildare and Meath; greatest length, N. and S., 32 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 18 miles; average breadth, 12 miles; coast-line, 42 miles; area, 218,873 ac. (134 water), or 1.1 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 157,568, of whom 110,879, or 70.4 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 37,674, or 23.9, Episcopalians; 3585, or 2.3, Presbyterians; and 2322, or 1.5, Methodists. Along the coast, which is irregular and generally of great beauty, are Dublin Bay, Howth Head, Lambay island, Ireland's Eye, and other islets. There are a few eminences in the N., and near the S. border the Wicklow mountains rise to an alt. of upwards of 2000 ft.; but the surface on the whole is flat and very luxuriant. The soil consists of rich clay and gravel; limestone is plentiful in the N., and granite occurs among the mountains. The Liffey is the only important river. The principal crops are wheat, barley, oats, and potatoes; but much of the surface is under pasture of remarkable verdure. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The fisheries, coast and inland, form an important industry. The co. comprises 66 pars., and parts of 18 others; and the parl. and mun. bor. of Dublin (4 members, and Dublin University, 2 members). For parl. purposes it is divided into 2 divisions, viz., North and South, 1 member for each div.—2. Market days, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Dublin was an ancient stronghold of the Danes, who held it along with the entire eastern coast of Ireland until defeated and broken up by Brian Boru at the battle of Clontarf (1014). No traces of the Danish occupation remain, and the city to-day is almost entirely modern. The view of the city and its environs, as observed from Dublin Bay, is exceedingly striking and picturesque. The city is divided into nearly two equal parts by the river Liffey, whose banks, for about 2½ miles from the sea, are lined with docks and shipping. The river is crossed further up by ten fine bridges. The principal objects of interest are—the Castle, the official residence of the Lord-Lieutenant and his staff, and containing an armoury for 80,000 men; the Bank of Ireland, formerly the Irish Parliament House, and which contains unaltered an oblong room—the Irish House of Lords; the University or Trinity College (founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1591); the Royal University and University College; the City Hall; Sackville Street, the finest street of the city; the Custom House; the Courts of Justice, or the Four Courts; Christ Church Cathedral, restored (1878) at a cost of £200,000, and St. Patrick's Cathedral, which has also been restored and improved. The Vartry waterworks provide the city supply; the reservoir at Roundwood, 24 miles S., has a holding capacity of 2½ million gallons. Leinster Lawn, or the Duke's Lawn, contains the National Gallery, Museum, and Public Library. The Phœnix (clear water) Park, situated on the western confines of the city, is 7 miles in circuit, and has an area of 1753 ac.; it contains the Viceroy's Lodge, and the official seat of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, an obelisk (205 ft. high) in honour of the Duke of Wellington, the People's Gardens (artificially laid out pleasure grounds), and the Zoological Gardens. St. Stephen's Green (20 ac.), on the S. side of the city, was restored and opened to the public in 1880. The city is encompassed by the Circular Road, which measures about 9 miles. There are several extensive military and constabulary barracks. The brewing of porter is extensively carried on, and whisky distilling. There are mfrs. of mineral waters, poplins, hats, agricultural implements; also ironfounding and shipbuilding. The docks and wharfage are now very extensive and commodious. The exports are provisions, live stock, wood mfrs., leather, porter, and whisky. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The Royal and Grand Canals extend from Dublin across the co. to the river Shannon. Dublin returns 4 members to Parliament—4 divisions, viz., College Green, Dublin Harbour, St. Stephen's Green, and St. Patrick's, 1 member for each division. Dublin University returns 2 members.

Dumbarrow, seat, Forfarshire. See DUNBARROW.

Dumbarton, cap. of co., parl., royal, and mun. burgh, par., market town, and seaport, with ry. sta., C. & N. B. Jt. R., Dumbartonshire, at the confluence of the Leven and the Clyde, 15½ miles NW. of Glasgow and 63 W. of Edinburgh by rail—par., 8324 ac., pop. 15,167; parl. burgh, pop. 18,836; royal burgh, pop. 15,046; town and mun. burgh, pop. 19,985; P.O., T.O. Market day, Tuesday. Dumbarton (Dunbreatan) is an ancient place originally called Alcluyd; it is supposed to have been a naval station of the Romans, and subsequently the capital of the British kingdom of Strathclyde. Its principal trade formerly was the mfr. of crown glass; it is now shipbuilding, and particularly the construction of iron steamers. The harbour is commodious, and a pier constructed from the foot of the Rock gives access to the river steamers. Amongst the public buildings are the Academy, Wm. Denny Institute, and the County Buildings. A public park was presented to the town in 1884. Dumbarton Rock shoots sheer up to a height of 240 ft., and is almost insulated at high water; it is crowned by Dumbarton Castle, one of the four Scottish castles garrisoned and kept in repair, as stipulated by the Treaty of Union. The burgh unites with Kilmarnock, Renfrew, Rutherglen, and Port-Glasgow in returning 1 member to Parliament.

Dumbarton, East, ry. sta., C. R., in co. and adjoining Dumbarton.

Dumbartonshire, co., partly maritime but chiefly inland, in W. of Scotland, comprising a main body and a detached portion; area, 246 sq. m., or 157,433 ac; pop., civ. co., 113,865, or 463 persons to each sq. m.; pop., admin. co., 93,900. The co. is served by the N. B. and C. Rys. The main body is in the shape of a crescent, having the convex side adjacent to the estuary of the Clyde, and measures 1½ to 14 miles in breadth, and about 38 miles between its extreme points. The N. section (about two-thirds of the entire area), projecting between Loch Long and Loch Lomond, is wholly mountainous, and is celebrated for its picturesque and sublime scenery. Ben Vorlich and Ben Vane, in the extreme N., are 3092 and 3004 ft. high. The lower district along the Clyde is flat, and in general under excellent cultivation. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX). The peninsular par. of Roseneath separates Loch Long and the Gare Loch, offshoots of the Firth of Clyde. The detached section (12 miles by 4 miles) lies 4½ miles E. of the nearest point of the main body. The rivers, besides the Clyde, are the Leven, Allander, Kelvin, and Endrick. The mfrs. are very important; numerous bleachfields, dye, print, and other works line the banks of the Leven; and there are extensive shipbuilding yards along the Clyde. Coal and ironstone are mined, and there is a slate quarry at Luss. D. in former times formed part of the territory of Lennox. Vestiges of the Roman wall of Antoninus still exist. The co. comprises 12 pars., the parl. and royal burgh of Dumbarton (one of the Kilmarnock Burghs), and the police burghs of Clydebank, Cove, and Kilcreggan, Helensburgh, Kirkintilloch and Milngavie. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

Dumfries, cap. of co., parl., mun., and royal burgh, par., and river port, with ry. sta., G. & SW. & C. Rys., Dumfriesshire, on river Nith, 33 miles NW. of Carlisle and 82½ SE. of Glasgow by rail—par., 10,084 ac., pop. 18,146; parl. burgh, pop. 18,685; royal burgh, pop. 17,079; mun. burgh, pop. 13,092; town, pop. 14,444; P.O., T.O. Market day, Wednesday. Dumfries is the chief place in the S. of Scotland. It is the capital of a rich rural district, and is an important manufacturing town. The staple is tweeds, but D. has also hosiery and hat mfrs., clog-making, basket-making, timber trade, ironworks, and tanneries. The traffic is now carried on chiefly by rail, and the port has decreased in importance, all the quays on the Nith being dry at low water. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) D. is connected with its suburb Maxwelltown (which, with the Terregles part of the town, is in Kirkcudbright) by three bridges. In the Minorite Convent Bruce slew the Red Comyn in 1305. The town was plundered and burned by the Highlanders in 1745. The poet Burns died at Dumfries in 1796, and was buried in the NE. corner of St. Michael's Churchyard, but the remains were removed to the SE. corner in 1815 when the Mausoleum was erected. A little below the town is the Crichton Institution, a lunatic asylum founded by Dr. Crichton in 1835 at a cost of £100,000. The Dumfries Burghs, for parliamentary purposes, consist of Dumfries, Annan, Lochmaben, and Sanquhar, in co. of Dumfries, and Kirkcudbright, in co. of same name; they send 1 member to Parliament.

Dumfriesshire, maritime co. on S. border of Scotland; adjoins the cos. of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk on the N., and on the S. is washed by the Solway Firth; extends about 53 miles NW. and SE. between Ayrshire and Cumberland, and about 32 miles NE. and SW. between Roxburghshire and Kirkcudbrightshire; coast-line, about 20 m.; area, 10,723 sq. m., or 686,302 ac.; pop., civ. co., 72,571, or 68 persons to each sq. m.; pop., admin. co., 52,744. The surface in general is bare and hilly. The dales of the Nith, Annan, and Esk, however, are rich in beauty, and contain fine holms for pasture and some good arable land. The rivers are numerous, and yield splendid salmon and trout fishing. The coast and S. region is low and sandy; much of it is covered with morass, and lochs are numerous around Lockerbie; but there is also much excellent corn-growing land. The Lowther or Lead Hills along the N. boundary are upwards of 2000 feet in height, and abound in lead ore. These and the other hills round the borders are mostly smooth in outline, and afford excellent pasturage. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Red sandstone is abundant, and limestone, coal, and lead are worked. The co. comprises 41 pars. with two parts, the parl. burghs of Annan, Dumfries (greater part), Lochmaben and Sanquhar (part of the Dumfries Burghs—1 member), and the police burghs of Annan, Dumfries, Lochmaben, Lockerbie, and Moffat. It returns 1 member to Parl.

Market day, Monday. Dundalk is a well-built thriving town and important railway centre. Here the G. N. R. has locomotive works. The R. C. Cathedral is one of the finest in Ireland; other public buildings are the Court House, Market House, and Town Hall. There are also public parks. D. has cavalry barracks. It carries on an active export trade with Liverpool and other ports; and by a branch line of railway to Greenore Harbour, 10 miles to the E. on Carlingford Lough, it maintains regular communication by steamer with Holyhead, the sea passage being 79 miles. The exports are grain, provisions, and live stock. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The harbour has been rendered safe by the removal of a shoal of sunken rocks at its entrance. Tanning, ironfounding, flax-spinning, tobacco manufacture, and shipbuilding are carried on. There is a distillery, and also mfrs. of salt, soap, candles, and leather. At entrance of channel is a lighthouse, with flashing light seen 9 miles.

(Dundee Combination), 10,732 ac., pop. 163,626; parl. burgh, pop. 159,083; royal burgh, pop. 160,878; mun. bor. and town, pop. 161,173. Market days, Tuesday and Friday. Dundee is in population the third town in Scotland. It is the first port in Britain for the seal and whale fishery, and the chief seat in Scotland of the linen mfr., and has the largest jute factories in the world. The principal textile productions are Osnaburghs, dowlas, canvas, sheetings, bagging, and especially jute weaving. The annual value of these fabrics is estimated at nearly £8,000,000. Among the other industries are the building of iron and steel steamships, sailing ships and whalers, engineering, tanning, and shoemaking by machinery. There are also considerable foundries, breweries, corn and flour mills, and confectionery and fruit-preserving (the celebrated Dundee marmalade) works. The harbour works extend about 2 miles along the river side; the docks, consisting of two tidal basins and four wet docks, cover an area of 35½ ac. On middle and E. piers, and at Camperdown Dock, are fixed lights (Dundee Harbour) seen 7, 7, and 3 miles. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) There is steamer connection with London, Newcastle, Hull, Leith, Hamburg, the Baltic, New York, &c. Railway communication with the south was rendered more direct by the Tay Bridge, opened in May 1878, and blown down in December 1879. Steps were almost immediately taken to rebuild it, and the new bridge was opened 1888. From Ferry Harbour a boat plies to Newport on the S. side of the river. Dundee has a College (1882), with an endowment of £140,000, and chairs for natural history and mathematics, chemistry, classics and history, English literature and language; it was incorporated with the University of St. Andrews in 1896, and is still being added to largely. It has also Free Libraries, Museum, the Victoria Art Galleries, and the Albert Hall Reading Room, all contained in the Albert Institute, an Esplanade, extending along the river side between Magdalen Point and Craig Pier and in process of further enlargement, and four public parks, the most notable of which is the Baxter Park (38 ac.), presented to the community by Sir David Baxter. Its most remarkable antiquities are—the "Old Steeple" (14th century), and the East Port, the sole relic of the ancient walls, allowed to stand in commemoration of Wishart the Martyr, who preached from it during the plague in 1544. Dundee was early a town of considerable note. It was made a royal burgh by William the Lion, and was twice taken possession of by the English during the War of Independence. In the reign of the Stuarts it was ranked the third town in Scotland after Edinburgh. In the 16th century it was the first Scottish town to renounce Popery; in 1645 it was pillaged by Montrose, and again by General Monk in 1651; it long suffered from these calamities, but in the end of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th centuries rapidly recovered even more than its former importance. Dundee was created a city by royal charter in 1888. The burgh returns 2 members to Parliament.

Durham.—co. palatine and maritime co., in N. of England; is bounded N. by the Derwent and the Tyne, beyond which is Northumberland; E. by the North Sea; S. by the Tees, beyond which is Yorkshire; and W. by Cumberland and Westmorland; greatest length (N. to S.), 40 miles; greatest breadth, 48 m.; length of coast line, 32 m.; area, 649,352 ac.; pop. 1,187,361. The co. is served entirely by the N. E. R. The western portion of the co. consists of hill-ranges, enclosing fertile valleys; the eastern portion, in which the prevailing rocks are magnesian limestone and new red sandstone, is more level; in the central districts are the coal measures. In the valleys, and in the neighbourhood of the rivers, especially the Tees, the soil is very fertile. The chief corn crops are wheat and oats; the chief green crops are potatoes and turnips. A hardy breed of horses is raised on the moors in the west, and in the fertile pastures of the valleys a breed of cattle which is unsurpassed for dairy purposes. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal mineral products are lead, iron, millstone, and coal. The coalfields are the most important in the kingdom. The principal mfrs. are chemicals, glass, and earthenware; shipbuilding and sail-making; paper-making; woollen and worsted stuffs, &c. Salt is extracted from brine at Port Clarence, Haverton Hill, and Greatham. There are also large ironworks and machine factories. Durham has great facilities of transport. The co. comprises 243 pars., the parl. and mun. bors. of Darlington, Durham, Gateshead, The Hartlepools, South Shields (1 member each), and Sunderland (2 members), the greater part of the parl. and mun. bor. of Stockton on Tees (1 member), and the mun. bor. of Jarrow. It is entirely in the diocese of Durham. For parl. purposes it is divided into 8 divisions, viz., Jarrow, Houghton le Spring, Chester le Street, North-Western, Mid, South-Eastern, Bishop Auckland, and Barnard Castle, 1 member for each division.—2. Durham, capital of the co., parliamentary and municipal bor., episcopal city, and market town, with ry. stas., N. E. R., 14¼ miles S. of Newcastle, 70½ N. of York, and 258½ N. of London by rail—parl. bor., 969 ac., pop. 15,122; mun. bor., 884 ac., pop. 14,679. Market day, Saturday. Durham is situated on a rocky eminence ("Dunholme," "Duresme," "Durham,") nearly surrounded by the river Wear. It dates from the 10th century, when the monks of Lindisfarne, after the ravaging of Holy Island by the Danes, rested there with the body of St. Cuthbert, and built a chapel for its reception. The present fine cathedral, containing the tomb of the Venerable Bede (d. 735), dates from 1093. The castle, said to have been erected by William the Conqueror, became the chief residence of the bishops of Durham; it is now appropriated to the uses of the university. The university, founded by Cromwell in 1646, and dissolved after the Restoration, was re-established by Act of Parliament in 1833. Besides the university, the educational institutions comprise a grammar-school founded by Henry VIII., a diocesan training-school for schoolmistresses, blue-coat, and other schools. The only industries of any importance are a carpet factory and a large mill for the mfr. of "Durham mustard." In the vicinity are coal-mines. West of the town is Neville's Cross. Here the Scots were defeated (1346), and King David Bruce taken prisoner. Cardinal Wolsey and Butler (1692–1752), author of "The Analogy," were bishops. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament.

Sussex, on the English Channel, 3 miles E. of Beachy Head and 66 SSE. of London by rail —mun. bor. and par., 5378 ac., pop. 43,344; P.O., T.O. Eastbourne comprises the old town, 1½ mile inland, and the new town on the sea. It is a rapidly growing place, and has doubled its population since 1881. E. has a sea frontage of 2½ miles. Its principal features are the esplanade, about 1 mile long, from about the centre of which a pier, 1000 ft. long, juts out; the carriage drive along the cliff; the Devonshire park (12 ac.); the Devonshire baths; the pavilion, with its concert and floral halls, its reading rooms, &c.; and the Princess Alice Memorial Hospital (1883). At the E. end of the esplanade is a battery of 11 guns, the Great Redoubt; at the W. end is the "Wish," a martello tower. There are golf links between the old and the new town. At the end of the pier is a fixed light visible 2 miles. Eastbourne was made a municipal borough in 1883, and obtained a separate Commission of the Peace in 1896. Many Roman antiquities have been found.

Railways, adjoining its seaport Leith on S. shore of Firth of Forth, 47¼ E. of Glasgow, and 392¼ N. of London by East Coast route—par., 8317 ac., pop. 303,638; parl. burgh, pop. 298,113; mun. burgh, pop. 316,837. Market day, Wednesday. The parliamentary limits were extended in 1885, when the members were increased from 2 to 4, and the municipal limits at various dates from 1882 to 1901, so as to include Portobello, Granton, and Duddingston. Edinburgh is one of the most picturesque of cities, and its beauties and historical associations attract a constant influx of visitors. It is built on 3 ridges running E. and W., and is surrounded on all sides, except the N., by lofty hills. The Old Town occupies the central ridge, terminated by the Castle on the W., and by Holyrood on the E.; the Castle Rock is 437 ft. high. The Castle was built in the 7th century by Edwin of Northumbria, on a site previously occupied, in all probability, by the Romans and the Southern Picts. Edinburgh was added to the kingdom of the Scots in the 10th century, and was made a burgh by David I., who, in 1128, founded the Abbey of Holyrood. From 1437 (when James I. was murdered at Perth) until the Union in 1603, it was the favourite capital of the Stuart kings. It was walled and fortified by James II. in 1450. The Old Town contains many buildings of historical interest, notably the ancient Parliament House (now forming part of the supreme courts of law) and the collegiate church or cathedral of St. Giles (built 1110, restored 1883). The approach to the North Bridge has been widened and is now a fine broad street. The New Town, which occupies the N. ridge, took its rise towards the end of the 18th century. It presents a splendid assemblage of streets, squares, gardens, and monuments, and contains St. Mary's Cathedral of the Scottish Episcopal Church, consecrated in 1879. More recently the city has extended rapidly towards the S. and the W. The principal industries of Edinburgh are printing, type-founding, bookbinding, lithographing, and engraving; machine-making and brass-founding; coach-building; mfrs. of glass and jewellery; tanning, brewing, and distilling. There are 4 distilleries. Edinburgh is the seat of the Government departments for Scotland, and is a garrison town. It is also the centre of the N. B. Ry. and the banking and insurance systems of Scotland. The suburban railway, 7 miles long, runs round the S. suburbs. Edinburgh has railway and tramway communication with Leith, which at one point it adjoins, and cable tramways radiate from Princes Street to the outskirts of the town. Edinburgh, however, depends for its prosperity chiefly on its courts of law, colleges, and schools, on its attractions for visitors, and its amenity as a place of residence. The University (1582) had in 1902–3 professors to the number of 42, and students to the number of 2957, of whom 1427 were medical students. Edinburgh has long been famous for its medical schools, which have attracted students from all parts of the world. The new Medical School, adjacent to the Royal Infirmary, which is a model building containing 850 beds, was opened in 1883, and the M'Ewan Hall in 1897. Of the other educational institutions the more prominent are the Heriot-Watt College, the Theological Colleges, the Training Colleges, the High School, the Merchant Company's Schools, Fettes College (modelled after the great public schools of England), George Heriot's School, the Royal Scottish Academy of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, and the School of Arts. There are also numerous hospitals (Donaldson's, the Trades' Maiden Hospital, the Orphan Hospital, &c.) for the maintenance and education of poor children. Other public institutions are the Museum of Science and Art, the Free Library, the National Portrait Gallery, and the National Museum of Antiquities. The Advocates' Library is entitled to receive a copy of every work entered at Stationers' Hall. The city also possesses a number of scientific societies, of which the Royal Society of Edinburgh, the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, and the Royal Physical Society may be mentioned. A handsome hall for concerts and other entertainments, to build which the late Mr. Andrew Usher gave £100,000, is to be erected in Castle Terrace. The burgh returns 4 members to Parliament—4 divisions, viz., East, West, Central, and South, 1 member for each div. The Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews return 1 member.

Edinburghshire (or Mid-Lothian), maritime co. in SE. of Scotland; is bounded E. by Haddington (or East-Lothian), Berwick, and Roxburgh; S. by Selkirk and Peebles; SW. by Lanark; and NW. by Linlithgow (or West-Lothian); coast-line, 12 miles; 366.2 sq. m. or 234,339 ac.; civ. co., pop. 488,766 or 1335 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 82,805. The surface is finely diversified. The Moorfoot Hills, a continuation of the Lammermuirs, occupy the SE.; the Pentland Hills stretch across the co. from the SW., and are continued NE. by the Braid and Blackford Hills. The Calton Hill, Castle Rock, and Arthur's Seat are three well-known eminences, the two former in the city and the latter in its immediate eastern vicinity. All the streams, with the exception of the Tyne and Gala, in the E. and the SE., run to the Firth of Forth; the principal are the North Esk, the South Esk, the Water of Leith, and the Almond; the North Esk especially is noted for its picturesque scenery. The lowlands towards the Forth are the most fertile; the hilly parts of the S. are chiefly under pasture; in the W. are dairy-farms; in the vicinity of the city of Edinburgh are extensive nursery grounds and market gardens. The principal crops are oats and barley, turnips and potatoes. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The co. consists chiefly of carboniferous strata; and coal, shale, ironstone, limestone, and freestone are extensively worked. There are valuable herring fisheries in the Firth of Forth. The mfrs. are limited; but (outside Edinburgh and Leith) there are numerous paper mills, oil-works, breweries, and several iron foundries and brick and tile works. Gunpowder is made at Roslin. The co. is traversed by the N. B. and C. Rys., and by the Union Canal. It contains 28 pars., and 1 part, the parl. burgh of Edin. (4 members, and Edin. University, with St. Andrews, 1 member), the Leith Burghs (Leith, Portobello, and Musselburgh—1 member), and the police burghs of Bonnyrigg, Dalkeith, Lasswade, Loanhead, and Penicuik. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

Market day, Friday. Elgin is finely situated on the Lossie in the midst of an amphitheatre of wooded hills and is in the par. of the same name and partly in New Spynie and St. Andrews Lhanbryde pars. The beauty of its scenery, the salubrity of its climate, and its schools, for which it has long been famous, make it an attractive place of residence, and it consists, in great part, of elegant mansions and villas. It is an ancient place, and contains many antiquities, notably the ruins of the Cathedral (founded 1224, burned by the "Wolf of Badenoch" 1390, restored 1424, plundered 1568), of the Bishop's town residence, and of the Convent of the Grey Friars, and the remains, on Ladyhill, of the old castle, one of the seats of Scottish royalty. Among its public buildings are Gray's Hospital (1819) and Anderson's Institution (1833), the County Buildings and the Museum; it has also a Public Park and Library. Elgin is the centre of one of the most fertile districts of Scotland, and its trade is largely connected with its weekly and other markets; it has, however, some small industrial establishments, including woollen manufactories, ironfoundries, tanneries, and breweries. The Elgin Burghs return 1 member: they consist of Elgin; Banff (including Macduff) and Cullen, in Banffshire; and Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead, in Aberdeenshire.

Elginshire, or Morayshire, maritime co. in NE. of Scotland; is bounded N. by the Moray Firth; E. and SE. by Banff, SW. by Inverness, and W. by Nairn; coast-line, 30 miles; area, 476.7 sq. m. or 305,119 ac.; civ. co., pop. 44,800, or 94 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 32,029. Along the sea-coast the surface is mostly low and sandy; inland it consists of fertile valleys, divided by low hills, which gradually rise to the mountains on the S. border. In the S. a large portion of the surface is still covered by forest. The county is served by the H. R. and G. N. S. R. The principal rivers are the Spey, Lossie, and Findhorn with beautiful scenery; the Spey and the Findhorn salmon fisheries are valuable; in the lochs there is abundance of trout; large quantities of haddock, cod, and ling are caught in the Moray Firth. In the lower part of the co. farming and stock-raising are prosecuted with great success. The principal crops are wheat, oats, potatoes, and turnips. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Granite occurs in the S., and red sandstone in the N. There are large quarries of freestone and a few slate quarries; whisky is distilled; and there is some shipbuilding at the mouth of the Spey; but otherwise the industries, besides agriculture and fishing, are unimportant. Corn, timber, salmon, and whisky are the chief exports. The ruins of Elgin Cathedral, one of the finest in Scotland, "Sweno's Stone," a carved monument, and several castles are among the antiquities. The co. comprises 19 pars. and 7 parts, the parl. and royal burgh of Elgin (part of Elgin Burghs—1 member), and the parl. and royal burgh of Forres (part of Inverness Burghs). It unites with the co. of Nairn in returning 1 member to Parliament.

Essex, maritime co. in SE. of England; is bounded N. by Cambridgeshire and Suffolk, E. by the North Sea, S. by the river Thames, and W. by Middlesex and Herts; greatest length, N. and S., 44 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 50 miles; 979,532 ac., pop. 1,083,998. The co. is served by the G. E. R., L. T. & S. R., and the Colne Valley & Halstead Ry. On the coast are several marshy islands, such as Canvey, Foulness, Wallasea, Mersea, &c. Essex is one of the Metropolitan shires, or "Six Home Counties," and took its name from the East Saxons. It rests upon the London clay, and is watered by the Stour, Colne, Chelmer, Crouch, Thames, Roding, Blackwater, and Lea; the surface, flat near the coast and the rivers, is undulating and sometimes hilly towards the NW.; the soil is generally fertile. Wheat and barley of fine quality are largely grown in the NW. and the centre; the marshes on the coast have for the most part been drained and converted into fertile grazing lands. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Essex had at one time a great extent of forest, which has almost entirely disappeared. Hainault Forest was disforested in 1851; Epping Forest was preserved by the Act of 1871. The co. has no mineral wealth, with the exception of chalk for lime, septaria for Roman cement, and clay for bricks. Its mfrs. are of no great extent—ironworks for the local supply of agricultural implements; silk, crape, velvet, and straw plait. There are powder stores at Purfleet, a Government powder factory at Waltham Abbey, and at Shoeburyness an artillery practice ground. The county contains the Tilbury Docks and the Victoria and Albert Docks; at Warley are the East India Barracks. There are several watering-places on the coast. The Barking fishing smacks carry on an active industry; and there are very productive oyster beds in the estuaries of the Crouch, the Blackwater, and the Colne. Essex comprises 398 pars., the parl. and mun. bor. of Colchester (1 member), the co. and parl. bor. of West Ham (2 members), and the mun. bors. of Chelmsford, Southend-on-Sea, Harwich, Maldon, and Saffron Walden. It is mostly in the diocese of St. Albans. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 8 divisions, viz., South-Western or Walthamstow, Southern or Romford, Western or Epping, Northern or Saffron Walden, North-Eastern or Harwich, Eastern or Maldon, Mid or Chelmsford, and South-Eastern, 1 member for each division.

Devon, on the Exe, 10½ miles by rail NW. of Exmouth at the outfall of the river, and 171¾ miles by rail SW. of London—parl. bor., 3645 ac., pop. 53,141; co. bor., including also the pars. St. Leonard and St. Thomas the Apostle, 3168 ac., pop. 47,185; par., 1890 ac., pop. 37,718. Market days, Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday. Exeter was the Caer Isc of the Britons, the Isca Damnoniorum of the Romans, and a seat of the West Saxon kings. It was surrounded with walls by Athelstan, and made an episcopal see (1050) by Edward the Confessor. The chief fortified town in the West, Exeter underwent, from the times of the Northmen to those of the Civil Wars, numerous sieges. The woollen trade, of which it was at one time a great seat, has quite passed away, and its mfrs. are now confined chiefly to "Honiton" lace; but it has also some iron foundries, manufactories of agricultural implements, paper-mills, and tanneries. The river traffic is still considerable. It is facilitated by the floating basin, and by the Ship Canal (begun in 1564) to the tideway at Topsham. Vessels of 300 tons can come up to the quay; larger vessels remain at Topsham, and those of the largest size at Exmouth. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal objects of interest are—the remains of the ancient walls; the cathedral (founded 1112, restored 1877), with its Norman transeptal towers, great bell weighing 2500 lbs., and astronomical clock; the remains of the castle, built by William the Conqueror; the Guildhall, an Elizabethan building, restored in 1720; and the Albert Memorial Museum (1868), with its school of art and its free library. The Technical College was opened in 1899; there are also a Training College for Schoolmasters, and a University Extension College. There are public parks and recreation grounds. There are artillery and infantry barracks. Exeter returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from the reign of Edward I. until 1885.

Exmoor.—par., Somerset; 20,344 ac., pop. 268; is a wild tract of moorland, about 30 square miles in extent, with deep romantic glens, reaching in Dunkery Beacon an elevation of 1707 ft. Exmoor was formerly a forest, but is now covered with heath and marsh, or with a coarse moor grass, which affords sustenance to considerable numbers of ponies, red deer, and horned sheep; the deer are still wild, and are hunted with staghounds. Parts of it are being brought into cultivation. The iron of Exmoor was worked at a very early period.—2. Exmoor (or Euximoor), vil., Upwell par., Cambridgeshire, 8 miles SE. of Wisbech.

Exmouth, urb. dist., watering-place, seaport, and market town, with ry. sta., L. & SW. R., E. Devon, at E. side of mouth of river Exe, 10½ miles SE. of Exeter; urb. dist. (containing the pars. of Littleham and Withycombe Raleigh), 4611 ac., pop. 10,485; P.O., T.O. Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Exmouth was the first watering-place on the coast of Devon, and is used not only for sea-bathing, but as a winter residence for those suffering under pulmonary complaints, the climate being mild, and the town being sheltered from the easterly winds. There are assembly rooms, baths, libraries, &c.; and the sea-wall, 1800 ft. long and 22 ft. high, makes a fine promenade. The chief industries are lace-making and the fisheries. The beach is fair, and there are golf links. There is a steam ferry to Starcross. Exmouth was at one time among the chief ports of Devon; in 1347 it contributed 10 vessels to the siege of Calais. Near the town is a natural harbour called the Bight, and docks were constructed in 1869. There is a beacon with fixed light visible 8 miles; on the terrace is also a fixed light visible 5 miles. Falmouth, seaport, mun. bor., and market town (in the pars. of Budock Urban, Falmouth Parish, and Falmouth Borough), with ry. sta., G. W. R., S. Cornwall, on Falmouth Harbour, at mouth of river Fal, 15 m. NE. of Lizard Head and 290¾ SW. of London by rail; mun. bor., 790 ac., pop. 11,789; P.O., T.O. Market days, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Falmouth was founded in the 17th century, and quickly superseded Penryn as the port of the harbour. It was for many years the station for the mail packets to the S. of Europe and the West Indies. It maintains steam communication with Plymouth, Southampton, London, Penzance, Liverpool, and Dublin, and is an important port of call in England. At the E. end of the peninsula on which Falmouth stands, is Pendennis Castle, notable for its siege in the Civil War. The harbour (5 miles by 1 mile) is an excellent refuge for shipping, the largest vessels finding safe anchorage; vessels of medium burden can discharge at the quay. There is some ship-building and rope-making; but the principal business of the place is furnishing provisions and stores to shipping. The Corporation controls the free library, landing piers, bathing beaches, and an oyster and mussel fishery. The piers are being extended at a cost of £10,000. The late Earl of Kimberley presented the town with a beautiful public park; a marine drive was constructed by public subscription. The trade of Falmouth has diminished, but its popularity with visitors has greatly increased; the climate is very equable, sharp frosts being almost unknown, while delicate varieties of rhododendron and camellia bloom in the open air throughout the winter. New artillery barracks have been erected by the War Department. On St. Anthony Point, at E. side of entrance to harbour, is a lighthouse with a revolving light (Falmouth) 72 ft. above high water, and seen 14 miles. In the same tower is a white fixed light visible 11 m.; on the end of the E. and W. breakwater are fixed lights visible 3 miles. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Falmouth forms part of the parl. bor. of Penryn and Falmouth; 1909 ac., pop. 16,312.

Fife (Fib, a Pictish chief), or Fifeshire, maritime co. in E. of Scotland; is bounded N. by the Firth of Tay, E. by the North Sea, S. by the Firth of Forth, and W. by the cos. of Perth, Kinross, and Clackmannan; greatest length, 44 m.; greatest breadth, 20 miles; area, 504.4 sq. m., or 322,844 ac.; civ. co., pop. 218,840, or 434 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 124,256. Fife forms the peninsula between the Firths of Forth and Tay. The coast is varied and picturesque; that part of it bordering on the Firth of Forth is lined with a succession of towns and villages, for the great number of which Fife is remarkable. The surface is pleasantly undulating. A ridge of high ground, commencing with the Lomond Hills, runs from W. to E.; to the N., between the Lomonds and a spur of the Ochils, lies an extensive plain called Strath Eden, or the Howe of Fife; to the S. is another stretch of low land, broken by Saline Hill, Knock Hill, the Hill of Beath, and the Cullalo Hills. The principal rivers are the Eden and the Leven. In the NW. the soil is moss, moor, and rock; in the NE. it consists of wet clay; the most fertile tracts are the Howe of Fife and the belt of loam which fringes the Firth of Forth. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The formation is chiefly Carboniferous, and Fife is the third largest coal-producing county in Scotland. Limestone and freestone abound. Blackband ironstone is worked at Lochgelly and Cowdenbeath, where there are smelting furnaces; oil shale was formerly worked near Burntisland. The fisheries of the Firths of Tay and Forth are important. The principal mfrs. are linen at Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy, Dysart, Cupar, &c.; waxcloth and linoleum are manufactured at Kirkcaldy. Fife is served entirely by the N. B. R. The co. comprises 62 pars. and 14 royal burghs, the Kirkcaldy Burghs (1 member), the St. Andrews Burghs (1 member), the parl. burghs of Dunfermline and Inverkeithing, Anstruther Easter, Anstruther Wester, Burntisland, Crail, Culross, Cupar, Dysart, Kilrenny, Kinghorn, and Kirkcaldy, and the police burghs of Auchtermuchty, Buckhaven with Methil and Innerleven, Cowdenbeath, Earlsferry, Elie (Liberty and Williamsburgh), Falkland, Ladybank (and Monkston), Leslie, Leven, Lochgelly, Markinch, and Newburgh. For parl. purposes it is divided into 2 divisions, viz., Eastern and Western, 1 member for each division; it returned 1 member until 1885.

Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Folkestone was at an early period a place of importance. The first nunnery in England was established there by St. Eanswith, daughter of Eadbald, King of Kent, who himself had erected (630) a castle and a church at Folkestone. In 1092 Folkestone became the seat of a priory for Benedictine monks. After the Reformation its prosperity greatly declined, and it was a mere fishing village until the formation of the harbour in 1809. F. is now the port for the steam packet service to Boulogne, distant about 30 miles. It is also a summer resort, has a considerable shipping trade, and is a centre of herring and mackerel fisheries. Public buildings include the Victoria Hospital (1890), the St. Andrew's Convalescent Home (1875), the Free Library with Museum, and the Town Hall, with memorial tablet in recognition of the services of local volunteers in the South African War. The Leas is a grassy expanse on the top of the cliff, well laid out and provided with bandstand and seats; it communicates with the beach by means of hydraulic lifts. Radnor Park is a public recreation ground. The Victoria Pier, with pavilion, lies W. of the harbour. There are excellent bathing facilities. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) A low water landing pier was erected in 1861, and the first stone of a deep water harbour was laid in October 1881; the latter has now been completed at a cost of £400,000. On the S. pier are 2 fixed lights seen 6 miles, and at the extremity of the new pier is a fixed light seen 6 miles. Folkestone was the birthplace of Harvey (1578-1657), discoverer of the circulation of the blood. The Manor House is a seat of the Earl of Radnor.—2. Forfar, co. town, parl., royal, and mun. burgh, and par., with ry. sta., C. R. (alt., 227 ft.), Forfarshire, in the Valley of Strathmore, 21½ miles NE. of Dundee, and 80¼ NE. of Edinburgh by rail—par., 8435 ac., pop. 12,879; royal burgh, pop. 12,117; parl., mun. burgh, and town, pop. 11,397; P.O., T.O. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. The staple industry is the mfr. of linen, especially of the coarser varieties; in connection with the linen factories are several bleaching-works. The Public Hall (1871) and County Buildings (1873) were the gift of a townsman, Mr. Peter Reid. Forfar was a royal residence of Malcolm Canmore, whose castle stood on the Castle Hill, a conical mound to the NE. of the town. Malcolm's queen, Margaret, had also a residence on the Inch in Forfar Loch (depth, 29 ft.), to the W. of the town, a sheet of water which has been much reduced by draining operations. Forfar was made a royal burgh by David I. (1124–1153). The castle, then occupied by an English garrison, was captured and demolished by King Robert Bruce, 1308; it was never rebuilt, and its site is now marked by the town cross (1648). Forfar unites with Montrose, Bervie, Arbroath, and Brechin in returning 1 member to Parliament.

Forfarshire, or Angus, maritime co. in E. of Scotland; is bounded N. by the cos. of Aberdeen and Kincardine, E. by the North Sea, S. by the Firth of Tay, and W. by the co. of Perth; greatest length, 37 miles; greatest breadth, 27 miles; area, 873.7 sq. m. or 559,171 ac.; civ. co., pop. 284,082 or 325 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 67,744. The co. is served by the C. R. and the N. B. R. The surface presents great variety. In the NW. are the Braes of Angus, a group of spurs of the Grampians, intersected by romantic glens; in the SW., 8 miles from and parallel to the Firth of Tay, are the Sidlaw Hills; between the Braes of Angus and the Sidlaw Hills is the fertile valley of Strathmore (Great Valley) or Howe of Angus; from the Sidlaw Hills to the coast on the E. and S. the land is level and highly cultivated. From Dundee to Arbroath the coast consists of sand; from Arbroath to Lunan Bay it is formed of sandstone cliffs, culminating in the Red Head. The principal height is Glas Meal (3502 ft.) at the meeting place of Forfar, Perth, and Aberdeen shires. The chief rivers are the Isla, a tributary of the Tay, and the North Esk and South Esk, which flow SE. to the North Sea. Agriculture has the advantage of the most approved methods, and cattle rearing is carried to great perfection; the polled Angus cattle, however, are now raised chiefly in the county of Aberdeen. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Nearly the whole of the NW. of the co. is either waste land, or is occupied as sheep-walks or deer-forests. Granite is the prevailing rock in the N. portion of the Grampians, and sandstone in the neighbourhood of the Sidlaw Hills; sandstone flags are quarried in the Carmylie district, and there are limeworks in the neighbourhood of Montrose. The principal industry is the mfr. of linen and jute; the co. is the principal centre of the coarse linen manufactures of Scotland. The co. contains 52 pars., the parl. and royal burghs of Dundee, Arbroath, Brechin, Forfar, and Montrose, the police burghs of Broughty Ferry, Carnoustie, Kirriemuir, and Monifieth. The co. returns 1 mem. to Parl.; in addition Dundee has 2 mem. and the Montrose burghs 1 mem.

Forth, quoad sacra par. and mining vil., Carnwath par., Lanarkshire—par., pop. 1790; vil., 1½ m. SW. of Wilsontown, pop. 680; P.O.

Forth, River, Scotland; is formed by 2 headstreams rising to the N. of Ben Lomond—the Duchray Water (flowing along the border of Stirling and Perth) and the Avondhu (flowing through Loch Chon and Loch Ard), which meet 1 mile W. of Aberfoyle, SW. Perthshire; flows E. to Stirling, and from Stirling (through the Links of Forth) to Alloa, whence it gradually expands into the Firth of Forth; is 52¾ miles long to Stirling, 12½ thence to Alloa, and 51¼ thence to the mouth of the estuary; is 1¼ mile wide between North and South Queensferry, 5 miles between Granton and Burntisland, and about 19 at the mouth of the estuary between Fife Ness and Dunbar. The anchorages are excellent, and the Firth of Forth is the most important harbour of refuge to the N. of the Humber. On the Isle of May, on Bass Rock, and on Inchkeith are lighthouses. Several of the ports (Leith, Granton, Bo'ness, Grangemouth) carry on a large foreign trade. Steamers go up to Stirling. The river is a good salmon stream, and the estuary abounds in white fish and herrings. The principal ferries are between Granton and Burntisland, and between North and South Queensferry.

Forth Bridge, between North and South Queensferry, Firth of Forth, a railway viaduct on the cantilever principle, was commenced January 1883, and opened by His Majesty the King (then Prince of Wales), March 1890; it is 2630 yards (1½ mile) long, including the N. and S. viaducts; the bridge proper is 5349½ ft., a little more than a mile, has 2 spans of 1710 ft., 2 of 690 ft., 14 of 168 ft., and 6 of 50 ft., and is 150 ft. above high water at spring tide. There were used in its construction 54,000 tons of iron and steel, and 250,000 tons of masonry; it took six years to build and cost 2¾ millions sterling. A railway bridge about ½ mile long, and with central swing opening, was erected over the Forth at Alloa in 1882–84.

Forth and Clyde Canal (constructed 1768–1790), extends from the Forth at Grangemouth to the Clyde at Bowling; is 38 m. long (with a branch of 2¾ m. to Port Dundas, Glasgow), rises 156 ft., and has 39 locks. It cost £330,000 and was purchased by the C. Ry. in 1867.

Of the cathedral (beginning of 14th century), the greater part of which was removed by Cromwell to provide materials for the erection of his fort at Inverness, there are now very few remains. Here formerly was a seat of the Bishops of Ross, but all traces of the palace have completely disappeared. Fortrose is a summer resort, its attractions being its romantic scenery, its fine links, and its facilities for sea-bathing. It has daily communication by steamer with Inverness. A new wooden pier, at which steamers can touch at all states of the tide, was erected in 1881. The harbour is safe and convenient; but there is no regular trade. Fortrose unites with Inverness, Nairn, and Forres in returning 1 member to Parliament.

T.O. Market days, Tuesday and Friday. Fraserburgh was originally called Faithlie, but afterwards took the name of its founder (1569), Fraser of Philorth. It is second only to Lerwick as a seat of the Scotch herring fishery; during 1902 it sent out 750 boats, and 230,960 crans (a cran = 3½ cwt.) of herrings. There are three tidal harbours, while 700 feet of the Balaclava Breakwater can be used for quayage in calm weather. A considerable trade is done in the export of agricultural produce and the import of coals and timber. The Pneumatic Machine Corporation of America are building works here, which will materially add to the prosperity of the town. A Marconi wireless telegraph station has been erected to carry out experimental tests between F. and Poldhu, Cornwall: it will probably be maintained permanently as a station of communication between Europe and Iceland. On the middle and north piers are red fixed lights visible 5 miles; on the outer end of the south breakwater is a fixed white light visible 2 miles, and on the outer end of Balaclava Breakwater, a green fixed light visible 5 miles.

Galway.—maritime co. of Connaught, and second largest in Ireland; is bounded N. by co. Mayo, NE. by co. Roscommon, E. by river Shannon (which separates it from King's co. and co. Tipperary), S. by co. Clare, and W. by the Atlantic Ocean; greatest length, E. and W., 96 miles; greatest breadth, NE. and SW., 53 miles; area 1,519,699 ac. (69,661 water), or 7.3 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 192,549, of whom 187,220 or 97.2 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 4402 or 2.3 Episcopalians, 616 or 0.3 Presbyterians, and 187 or 0.1 Methodists. Galway is served by the M. G. W. R. and G. S. & W. R. The coast, along which are numerous creeks, bays, and islands, measures about 217 m. The co. is naturally divided into two sections by Lough Corrib, on which vessels can ply from Cong and proceed by a canal to Galway Bay, a distance of about 30 miles. The principal islands on the W. coast include the Aran group, Gorumna, and Lettermore. The chief rivers are the Shannon, its tributary the Suck, and the Clare. The bays include Galway Bay, Kilkieran, Bertraghboy, Mannin, Ballynakill, and Little Killary Bays. The western section (the three divisions of which are known as Iar Connaught, Connemara, and Joyce's Country) is barren and mountainous. The chief summit is Benbaun (2395 ft.), in the group named the Twelve Pins. A striking peculiarity is the multiplicity of small loughs, especially in Connemara and Iar Connaught. The region abounds in wild and beautiful scenery, and is frequented by great numbers of tourists. The eastern section is nearly flat. The soil generally consists of a light limestone gravel. Numerous flocks of sheep and herds of black cattle are reared. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Iron, lead, and copper occur; but limestone and marble are the chief minerals. The fisheries are very important. Coarse linens and woollens are manufactured; kelp is made from seaweed. The co. comprises 97 pars. and parts of 7 others; Galway parl. bor. (1 member), and Ballinasloe (part), Loughrea, and Tuam, towns. It returns 4 members—4 divisions, viz., Connemara, North, East, and South.—2. Galway, co. town of Galway, parl. bor., seaport, urb. dist., and co. of itself, with ry. sta., M. G. W. R., at the influx of river Corrib into Galway Bay, 129 miles by rail W. of Dublin, 65 NW. of Limerick, and 20 S. of Tuam by road—urb. dist., 5368 ac., pop. 13,426; parl. bor., 22,532 ac., pop. 16,257. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Galway is an ancient town; a map made by the Marquis of Clanricarde in 1651 depicts it as a walled town with 14 towers and as many gates. No trace of the fortifications remain, beyond an archway and a fragment near the quay. The town has considerable trade, and exports agricultural produce and black marble. The haven is considered to be one of the best and safest on the Irish coast. A floating dock, having an area of 5 ac., admits ships of 500 tons burden. A canal connects Lough Corrib with the harbour. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) There are several flour mills, iron foundries, brush factories, and yards for the cutting and polishing of marble; also a distillery. The extensive herring and other fisheries give employment to a large population living chiefly in the suburb of Claddagh. Galway is the seat of one of the Queen's colleges of Ireland, and of a Roman Catholic Diocese. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament (2 members till 1885).

Glamorgan, a maritime co. of South Wales, bounded N. by Carmarthen, Brecknock, and Monmouth, E. by Monmouth and the estuary of the Severn, S. by the Bristol Channel, and W. by Carmarthen and Carmarthen Bay; greatest length, N. and S., 28 m.; greatest breadth, E. and W., 48 m.; area, 576,537 ac., pop. 866,250. Glamorgan is, commercially, the most important co. in Wales, chiefly owing to its vast mineral resources, the fertility of its soil, and the extent and convenience of its seaboard. Glamorgan is served by the G. W. R., L. & NW. R., Taff Vale R., Barry R., Port Talbot R., Rhymney R., Brecon and Merthyr R., Neath and Brecon R., and M. R. The surface of the co. in the N. is mountainous; but towards the S. it becomes more level, especially in the fertile expanse known as the Vale of Glamorgan. It is watered by various rivers, of which the more important are the Taff, Taw, Neath, and Rhymney; all the streams flow S. to the Bristol Channel. The Llwchwr forms part of the western boundary. Mining is the principal industry, the co. having one of the largest coalfields in Britain, while its supply of ironstone and limestone is said to be inexhaustible. The quality of the coal is eminently suitable for smelting purposes and for use in steamships, and in consequence of the development of the coalfields, the population of this co. has increased during the last century with greater rapidity than that of any other in the United Kingdom. The soil yields abundant and excellent crops of the usual cereals, and large quantities of dairy produce are exported. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Some of the largest ironworks in the world are in Glamorgan, notably those at Merthyr Tydfil and Dowlais; the ore is, however, principally imported, the output of the local product being comparatively small owing to the difficulty found in working it. The co. likewise contains very important copper, tin, and lead works. Glamorgan comprises 165 pars., the parl. and co. bors. of Cardiff and Swansea (2 members), the greater part of the parl. bor. of Merthyr Tydfil (2 members), the Cardiff Boroughs (Cardiff, Cowbridge, and Llantrisaint—1 member), and the mun. bors. of Aberavon, Cardiff, and Neath. It is in the diocese of Llandaff. For parl. purposes it is divided into 5 divisions, viz., Eastern, Rhondda, Western or Gower, Mid, and Southern, 1 member for each division.

Glasgow (co. of the City of Glasgow), parl., royal, and mun. burgh, on river Clyde, with ry. stas., C. R. (Central and Buchanan St.), N. B. R. (Queen's St.), G. & SW. R. (St. Enoch), and numerous suburban stas. G. is the centre of the C. R. and G. & SW. R. systems. It stands 14 miles SE. of Dumbarton on the river Clyde, 47½ by rail W. of Edinburgh, and 401¼ by West Coast route NW. of Euston sta., London—royal burgh, pop. 760,468; parl. burgh, pop. 622,372; mun. bor., pop. 761,709; the parliamentary constituency comprises 92,101 electors. Market day, Wednesday. Glasgow is the commercial and industrial metropolis of Scotland, and the second city of the United Kingdom in point of population. It is an ancient place, but almost the only monument of antiquity which it contains is the Cathedral (1179), dedicated to St. Mungo, or Kentigern, the apostle of Strathclyde, who is said to have settled at Glasgow about 580. This is the only cathedral that escaped mutilation during the 16th and 17th centuries; it is also remarkable for its crypt, built under the choir, which is unsurpassed by any similar structure in Britain; the crypt is the scene of Rob Roy's warning to Francis Osbaldistone in Scott's "Rob Roy." The University on Gilmour Hill, in the NW. of the city, is probably the finest modern specimen of secular architecture in Scotland. The University (1450) had in 1902–3 professors to the number of 31, and students to the number of 2141. The commercial importance of Glasgow is of comparatively modern date. The chief natural cause of the rapid growth of Glasgow is its position within the richest coal and ironstone field in Scotland, and on the banks of a river which has been rendered, by almost incredible labour, navigable for vessels of the largest tonnage. Its industries, which are characterised by their immense variety, include textile mfrs. (principally cotton, woollen, and carpets); bleaching, printing, and dyeing; chemical mfrs.; the iron mfr., engineering (including the construction of locomotives and marine engines), and shipbuilding. There are distilleries and paper mills. All the iron trade of Scotland is controlled by Glasgow, which is also the headquarters of the great shipbuilding industry of the Clyde; a greater number of iron and steel ships are built here and in the vicinity than at any other port in the kingdom. It is one of the three principal seaports of the United Kingdom. The harbour extends W. from Victoria Bridge, for over two miles, on both sides of the river, and includes 3 tidal docks, one of them (the Prince's Dock) the largest in Scotland. West of Glasgow Bridge is the Broomielaw, an extensive quay for passenger steamers. The foreign trade is with all parts of the world, but chiefly with India, the United States, Canada, and South America, Belgium, France, and Spain. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Glasgow contains terminal stations of the three great trunk lines of Scotland above mentioned; and its railway communications are assisted by a Cable Subway, and two Underground Railways, N. B. R., and C. R. Electric tramways penetrate into every suburb, and the Clyde is crossed by numerous bridges and ferries; there are in all thirteen bridges—three being railway bridges. There are numerous public parks and recreation grounds, including amongst others The Green with Richmond Park situated in proximity, the Kelvingrove or West End Park, Ruchill Park, Springburn Park, Tollcross Park, the Queen's Park, Bellahouston Park, the Alexandra Park, &c. At Kelvinside are the Botanic Gardens, now open to the citizens as a public park; immediately adjacent is Queen Margaret College for women university students. The water supply of the city comes partly from the Gorbals reservoirs in Renfrewshire, and partly from a separate area in Perthshire (the drainage basin of Loch Katrine), which latter supply is stored in large reservoirs principally at Craigmaddie and Mugdock. The City Chambers are at the E. end of George Square, which contains some good statues. Amongst other public buildings are the Art Galleries in Kelvingrove Park, museum in Queen's Park, and People's Palace in Glasgow Green; the Western Infirmary, the Royal Infirmary and Victoria Infirmary, the Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College. The principal cemetery is the Necropolis; it contains many fine monuments, including one of John Knox. The Western Necropolis has a crematorium. Glasgow is a military depôt; the barracks (1876) are at Maryhill. The burgh returns 7 members to Parliament—7 divisions, viz., Bridgeton, Camlachie, St. Rollox, Central, College, Tradeston, and Blackfriars and Hutchesontown, 1 member for each division; it also contains parts of the parliamentary divisions of NW. Lanarkshire, Partick division of Lanarkshire, W. division of Renfrewshire, and E. division of Renfrewshire; its representation was increased from 3 to 7 members in 1885, when the parliamentary limits were extended; the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen return 1 member.

Gloucestershire, on E. bank of river Severn, 48 miles S. of Birmingham, 114 miles NW. of London, and 37 miles NNE. of Bristol—parl. bor., 1437 ac., pop. 45,146; co. bor. and par., 2315 ac., pop. 47,955. Market day, Saturday. The antiquity of Gloucester is amply proved both by recorded history and by the discovered relics of its ancient inhabitants—British, Roman, and Saxon. Its ecclesiastical associations are of the greatest interest. In 679 a monastery was founded, and is still represented by the magnificent cathedral which adorns the city. The see of Gloucester was formed in 1541; before that date the whole of the co. belonged to Worcester diocese. Several parliaments were anciently held in the city. During its occupation by the Parliamentarians in 1643 it was besieged by Charles I. A modern cross marks the spot where Bishop Hooper suffered martyrdom in 1555. G. contains, besides the Cathedral and Town Hall, the College School, the Crypt Grammar School (with exhibition to Pembroke College, Oxford), and Blue Coat Hospital, founded 1666; a new episcopal palace was built in 1861. The public park and pleasure grounds cover an area of twenty acres, while there are recreation grounds in various parts of the city. There are good public baths. A new and well-equipped hospital for infectious diseases has been built about one mile from the city boundary. The museum and technical schools are under municipal control; over a thousand persons attend the classes. The electricity works of the Corporation were opened in 1900; they were erected at a cost of over £57,000, exclusive of the site, which was already the property of the municipality. A triennial musical festival is held in Gloucester alternately with Worcester and Hereford. Gloucester carries on an important foreign trade, especially with the Baltic ports. The Gloucester and Berkeley Canal (16 miles) connects the city docks (12½ ac.) with those at Sharpness on the estuary of the Severn. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) G. has mfrs. of cutlery and shipbuilding, foundries, chemical works, cordage works, railway plant works, agricultural implement works, and breweries. Gloucester was the birthplace of Taylor, the Water Poet (1580–1654), Whitfield, the founder of the Calvinistic Methodists (1714–1770), and Raikes, the founder of Sunday schools in England (1735–1811). The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament (2 members until 1885).

Gloucestershire, a west Midland co., situated upon the estuary of the Severn, and bounded N. and NE. by Herefordshire, Worcestershire, and Warwickshire; E. by Oxfordshire; S. by Berks, Wilts, and Somerset; and W. by Monmouthshire, Herefordshire, and the estuary of the Severn; greatest length, SW. to NE., 64 miles; greatest breadth, NW. to SE., 36 miles; area (inclusive of 2 co. bors.), 805,482 ac., pop. 708,439. The face of the county shows varied aspects, of which the most distinctive are the Cotswold Hills, in the E.; the valley of the Severn, in the middle; and the Forest of Dean, in the W. Besides the Severn there are numerous important rivers, such as the Avon, Lower Avon, Wye, Thames, Leach, and Windrush. The co. is served by the M. R., G. W. R., and Mid. and South-Western Junction Ry. The canal system has been largely developed, and several important waterways of that description pass through the county. The Thames and Severn Canal is entirely within Gloucestershire. Agriculture forms the leading occupation of the rural population; in the hills sheep-farming receives attention; while the rich valley of the Severn has long been famed for the superiority of its products. Its luxuriant pastures especially have originated and supported a great industry in the shape of dairy farms which produce the celebrated Glo'ster cheese. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) In the W. of the county are 2 great coal-fields—the Forest of Dean, which also has iron ore, and the Bristol coal-field. Other minerals are ochre, gypsum, barytes, quartz, limestone, and freestone. The mfrs. include silk, woollen, and cotton stuffs, gloves, glass, &c., and at Bristol there are also mfrs. of hardware, and of broadcloth in the Stroud Valley. The ancient or geographical county of Gloucestershire comprises 359 pars., the greater part of the parl. and the entire co. bor. of Bristol (4 members), the parl. and mun. bors. of Cheltenham (1 member) and Gloucester (1 member), and the mun. bor. of Tewkesbury. It is mostly in the dioceses of Gloucester and Bristol. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 5 divisions, viz., Mid or Stroud, Northern or Tewkesbury, Eastern or Cirencester, Forest of Dean, and Southern or Thornbury, 1 member for each division.

Grangemouth was founded in 1777, in connection with the construction of the Forth and Clyde Canal; in 1810 it was made a head port, while within the last twenty years it has doubled its population. It has now four docks, the property of the C. R., a harbour, and a graving dock. Grangemouth is the headquarters of several steamship lines trading to London, Norway, Sweden, the Baltic, and elsewhere. The Caledonian Railway Company is constructing new docks which will extend from the old docks down to low-water line; it is estimated that these extensions will cost upwards of £1,000,000. Considerable dredging will always be necessary, as the main channel is not too deep at low water. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) On end of S. embankment, at entrance of river Carron, is a lighthouse with fixed light seen 10 miles. The chief exports are coal, iron goods, hides, and machinery; imports include margarine, dyestuffs, iron ore, paper, pitwood, and sawn timber. Shipbuilding (principally of iron steamers) is carried on; and there are saw-mills, an iron foundry, and a rope and sail factory. Grangemouth has a Public Institute, opened 1876; a public park, presented by the Earl of Zetland, 1882; and a Town Hall, founded 1884. Market day, Friday. It was created a burgh of barony in 1635, but at the Union in 1707, it was still a mere fishing village; in 1710, when the first harbour was completed, it was made a custom-house port. At the beginning of the 19th century it ranked as the first port in Scotland, but it afterwards suffered severely for a time by the deepening of the Clyde up to Glasgow. It has five dry docks, James Watt wet dock, and six harbours, including the Garvel Basin and the Great Harbour, which are as yet unfinished.

G. carries on a large foreign trade, chiefly with the West and East Indies, the United States, Canada, and Australia. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) It has also an extensive passenger and goods traffic with Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, &c. Prince's Pier is a great starting-point for tourists to the Western Highlands. Greenock is the chief seat of the sugar-refining business in Scotland, but this industry has been much injured by the foreign bounty system. Sugar refining and iron shipbuilding are the principal among many important industries. Greenock has also woollen spinning and engineering works. James Watt (1736–1819) was a native; and among the public buildings—which include the Custom House, Wood's Asylum for Mariners, and the Municipal Buildings (1886)—are the Watt Institution (containing the Greenock Library) and the Watt Museum and Lecture Hall. In the churchyard of the North Kirk is the tomb of Burns's "Highland Mary." Places of public resort, besides the parks, are the Lyle Road, which passes over the heights behind the town, and commands a series of magnificent views, and the Esplanade, which stretches along the margin of the river, and forms a promenade 1½ mile long. The water supply comes from a reservoir in the Gryfe valley. Water for motive power is obtained from Loch Thom (alt. 500 ft.) 3 miles to the South. Greenock returns 1 member to Parliament.

Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Greenwich possesses several important mfrs., including telegraph works, engineering works, chemical works, &c. The Royal Observatory within G. Park has a world-wide celebrity; English geographers calculate longitude from its meridian, and chronometers are sent here to be tested. Fifteen acres of land were added to the Park in 1897 by desire of Queen Victoria. Greenwich Hospital, now the Royal Naval College, is a splendid edifice built upon the site of a royal palace, which was the birthplace of Henry VIII., Queen Mary, and Elizabeth. The Painted Hall contains naval pictures, statues, and, until 1900, valuable Nelson relics. The latter were mysteriously stolen and have not been traced. Other public buildings include the Royal Naval College and the Seamen's Hospital. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members until 1885, when its parl. limits were reduced by the formation of the new parl. boroughs of Deptford and Woolwich.

Haddington has one of the largest grain markets in Scotland. Among the chief buildings are the church, a Gothic edifice of the 12th or 13th century, which is surmounted by a square tower 90 ft. high, known as the Lamp of Lothian, while its nave only is preserved as the parish church; the Corn Exchange (1854); and the Knox Memorial Institute (1880), an educational foundation (with which the old grammar school is incorporated) in memory of John Knox (1505-1572), the Scottish Reformer, a native of Haddington. Haddington gives the title of earl to the Hamiltons of Innerwick.

Haddingtonshire, or East Lothian, maritime co., in SE. of Scotland; is bounded NW., N. and NE. by the Firth of Forth and the North Sea, SE. and S. by Berwickshire, and W. by Edinburghshire (or Midlothian); greatest length, N. and S., 17 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 26 miles; area, 267.2 sq. m., or 171,011 ac.; civ. co., pop. 38,665, or 145 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 28,298. The co. is served by the N. B. R. The coast along the Firth of Forth is flat and sandy; along the North Sea it is bold and rocky. In the S. are the Lammermuir Hills, whence the surface slopes gently to the sea, in a vast plain, watered by the river Tyne, and broken by the Garleton Hills, and by the isolated summits of Traprain Law (alt., 700 ft.) and North Berwick Law (alt., 612 ft.). Of the cultivated part of the co.—finely diversified by woods and plantations—the soil is mostly a clayey loam, and is generally fertile, and Haddington is one of the foremost agricultural counties of Scotland. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Great numbers of sheep are fed on the Lammermuir Hills. The mfrs. are unimportant; they consist of breweries, potteries, brickworks, salt pans, a paper mill, a distillery, &c. The western part of the co. forms the eastern margin of the Mid-Lothian coalfield, and is rich in coal and limestone, which are extensively worked. Some of the most important coal mines are those of Tranent and Preston-grange. Fishing and fish-curing are carried on at Dunbar, Cockenzie, and other points. There are numerous ruined castles and forts in the co., including amongst others, those at Dunbar, Tantallon, Innerwick, and on the Bass Rock. The co. comprises 24 pars., the royal and police burghs of Dunbar, Haddington, and North Berwick, and the police burghs of Cockenzie with Port Seton, East Linton, Prestonpans, and Tranent. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

The Parliamentary constituency comprises 15,247 electors. Market day, Saturday. The importance of Halifax is due to its extensive mfrs., which originated early in the 15th century. Previously it was little more than a straggling village. The municipal boundaries were extended in 1899–1900. The water supply comes from three sources—the Ogden, Luddendon, and Widdop systems. The Corporation obtained power in 1898 to construct three additional reservoirs at Walshaw Dean at a cost of £157,000. The principal buildings are of modern date, except the beautiful parish church (restored 1879) of St. John the Baptist, which was first erected in the 11th century. All Souls' Church, the Square Church, and the Town Hall also are remarkable for their architectural beauty. The Piece Hall, a quadrangle with 315 rooms, in which manufacturers formerly kept their cloth, is now used by the Corporation as a wholesale market. There are 5 public parks and several recreation grounds. There is a central free library with branches. There are grammar schools and a blue-coat school. The town ranks with Leeds, Bradford, and Huddersfield as a centre of the Yorkshire woollen and worsted mfrs. Carpets, damasks, cashmeres, baizes, blankets, and a variety of the lighter descriptions of textile fabrics, are its principal productions. Many of the inhabitants are employed in coal mines and stone quarries in the vicinity of the town. Ironworks, chemical works, and the mfr. of machinery, are also leading occupations. Halifax (originally called Horton) was made a parliamentary bor. in 1832, and a municipal bor. in 1848. The bor. returns 2 members to Parliament.

rail—par., 13,129 ac., pop. 40,372; parliamentary and mun. burgh, pop. 32,775. Market day, Friday. The original town (called Netherton) occupied a site within the Duke of Hamilton's park; the present town dates from the early part of the 15th century. The prosperity of the place depends chiefly upon the minerals (coal, ironstone, limestone, and sandstone), which are extensively worked in the neighbourhood. Hamilton is a brigade-depôt, and has an extensive range of barracks; it has also several good middle-class schools. In the immediate vicinity are large market gardens, and numerous villas of Glasgow merchants. Along with Falkirk, Airdrie, Lanark, and Linlithgow, Hamilton returns 1 member to Parliament. On the low ground between the town and the Clyde is Hamilton Palace, seat of the Duke of Hamilton (and Brandon), the premier peer of Scotland; it includes a tower of 1591, but is chiefly modern, and is one of the most magnificent edifices in the kingdom; it stands in an extensive park, containing a racecourse, at which numerous meetings are held, and also a mausoleum, the chateau of Chatelherault, and Cadzow Castle. Hampshire, Hants, or Southampton, maritime co. (including the Isle of Wight), in S. of England; bounded N. by Berks, E. by Surrey and Sussex, S. by the English Channel, and W. by Wilts and Dorset; greatest length (exclusive of the Isle of Wight), N. to S., 41 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., 39 miles. The admin. co., together with 3 co. bors. and the Isle of Wight (94,068 ac., pop. 82,418) has an area of 1,052,810 ac., pop. 799,582. The parliamentary constituency comprises 57,190 electors. The county is served by L. & SW. R., partly by the SE. & C. R., and by the L. B. & S. C. R. Hampshire is undulating, in parts finely wooded. Its coast line is very irregular, the principal indentation being Southampton Water. From Surrey and Sussex, NE. to Wilts and Berks, two ranges of chalk hills, known as the North and South Downs, traverse the co. In the SW. is the New Forest, and in the SE. are the Forests of Bere and Waltham Chase. The Avon, Stour, Exe, Test, Itchen, and Hamble are the chief rivers. The co. is noted for its agriculture, the wheat of Hampshire being especially prized. Upon the Downs are reared large flocks of the variety of sheep known as "Hampshire Downs" or "short wools." Pig breeding, and the curing of bacon, have long been large and lucrative branches of the county's industry. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The mineral resources are meagre; and, with the exception of the shipbuilding yards at Portsmouth and Southampton Docks and the carriage works of the L. & SW. R. at Eastleigh, the mfrs. also are unimportant. The shipping, however, is very extensive. Hampshire (with the Isle of Wight) comprises 394 pars., the co. bors. of Bournemouth, Portsmouth (2 members), and Southampton (2 members), the parl. and mun. bors. of Christchurch (1 member), and Winchester (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Andover, Basingstoke, Lymington, Romsey, Newport, and Ryde. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Winchester. For parl. purposes it is divided into 6 divisions, viz., Northern or Basingstoke, Western or Andover, Eastern or Petersfield, Southern or Fareham, New Forest, and Isle of Wight, 1 member for each.

Hampstead, parl. bor., met. bor., and par., co. of London—parl. bor., 2247 ac., pop. 82,329; met. bor. and par., 2265 ac., pop. 81,942. The parliamentary constituency comprises 10,778 electors. Hampstead Heath is here, and one of the old inns (now a private residence) was the meeting-place of the Kit-Cat Club, of which Addison, Steele, Marlborough, and Walpole were members. The locality is otherwise famed in the history of literature and art, and the graveyard contains some interesting monuments. The Heath (240 ac.) is one of the finest open spaces in London, and contains many features of natural beauty. Here is Jack Straw's Castle (443 ft.), an inn, traditionally connected with the insurgent leader of that name. The picturesque ponds date from the reign of Henry VIII. Some adjoining estates have been acquired during recent years and thrown open to the public. Hampstead returns 1 member to Parliament; it was made a parl. bor. in 1885.

Market day, Tuesday. Harwich has been a place of note from a very early period; it was called Harwic ("army bay") by the Saxons. Being one of the best and safest harbours on the E. coast, its shipping is very important, especially the trade with Holland and North Germany, and it is fourth on the list of ports as regards the value of dutiable goods imported. H. is a military and naval station, and the harbour is well protected by formidable forts and batteries. Steam packets ply regularly between Harwich and the Continent in connection with the G. E. R. and the General Steam Navigation Company; the passage to the Hook (Hoek) of Holland takes on an average about eight hours. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The lobster and shrimp fisheries are important. Other industries of the district are shipbuilding, Roman cement works, brewing, sail-making, ropemaking, and the mfr. of artificial manure. On the shore, or Inner Ridge, abreast of Dovercourt, are 2 fixed lights (Harwich) seen 11° and 9½ miles, and near the extremity of Landguard Point is a fixed light (Harwich) seen 10 miles.

Hebrides, The (or Western Islands), the collective name of the islands on the W. coast of Scotland; about 100 of them are inhabited. They are geographically divided into the Inner Hebrides, comprising the 3 groups of Islay, Mull, and Skye, and extending from The Aird, in N. of Skye, to the Mull of Islay, a distance of 150 miles; the Outer Hebrides (separated from the Inner Hebrides by the Minch), or The Long Island, comprising Lewis, Harris, North Uist, Benbecula, South Uist, Barra, &c., and extending from the Butt of Lewis to Barra Head, a distance of 130 miles; and the small St. Kilda group about 40 miles W. of N. Uist. Anciently they comprehended also the islands in the Firth of Clyde, the peninsula of Kintyre, the island of Rathlin, and the Isle of Man. They are politically divided between the shires of Ross and Cromarty, Inverness, and Argyll. The principal towns are Stornoway, in Lewis; Tobermory, in Mull; Bowmore, in Islay; and Portree, in Skye. The Hebrides are the Hebudes of Pliny, and the Sudreys, or Southern Islands, of the Norwegians, by whom they were held from the close of the 9th century till 1266, when they were transferred to Scotland. In 1346 they fell under the sway of the "Lords of the Isles," who for nearly 200 years affected independent sovereignty; and they continued to be a scene of turbulence until the abolition of heritable jurisdictions in 1748. The humid climate of the Hebrides is unsuitable for corn crops, and only a comparatively small portion of the soil is arable. The principal crops are oats, barley, and potatoes. Much of the surface is occupied by sheep-farms and moors. The raising of cattle and sheep, and distilling (principally in Islay) are the principal industries. The mfr. of kelp, which was at one time extensively carried on, is now almost extinct; the fisheries, which were formerly important, have also decreased in value. The exports include live stock, wool, limestone, and slate. The Hebrides are visited by great numbers of tourists, and have regular steamboat communication with Oban and Glasgow. There are lighthouses at the Butt of Lewis, Tiumpan Head, Stornoway, Monach islands, Scalpay island, Ushinish, Eilean More, and Barra Head.

Hereford ("the ford of the army"), parl. and mun. bor., city, and co. town of Herefordshire, with ry. sta. (Barr's Court), G. W. & L. & NW. Jt. R., on N. bank of river Wye, 144 miles NW. of London by rail; parl. and mun. bor., 5031 ac., pop. 21,382. The parliamentary constituency comprises 3571 electors. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. During the Heptarchy Hereford was the capital of Mercia. Much of its early history is connected with its position as a border garrison town, which was frequently subjected to the attacks of the ancient and turbulent inhabitants of Wales. The see of Hereford was erected in the 7th century, and in 1189 the town received its first charter from Richard I. Hereford Cathedral, a very beautiful building, with a tower 160 ft. high, was built about 1115, on the site of an older edifice; it was restored from designs by Sir Gilbert Scott in 1863. It contains a celebrated Mappa Mundi (c. 1314), of which a facsimile was published in 1872. Every third year the festival of the three choirs (H., Worcester, and Gloucester), which was first held in 1724, takes place here. The city was about the last place that surrendered to the Parliamentarians. It was the birthplace of David Garrick (1716–1769) and of Nell Gwynne. The mfrs. are encaustic tiles, leather, &c. Cider-making and brewing are also industries. Nearly all traces of the ancient castle have disappeared, but the site of the lower court is known as the Castle Green, and is used as a public recreation ground. The racecourse is the property of the Corporation, which also maintains the free library and museum. Amongst other public edifices are the Municipal Buildings, Shire Hall, and H. County College. Important cattle and cheese fairs are held. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament.
Herefordshire, an inland co. on the SE. border of Wales, and bounded N. by Shropshire, E. by Worcestershire and Gloucestershire, S. by Gloucestershire and Monmouthshire, and W. by Monmouthshire, Brecknockshire, and Radnorshire; greatest length, N. and S., 38 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 35 miles; 538,921 ac., pop. 114,125; the parliamentary constituency comprises 19,409 electors. H. is served by the G. W. R., L. & NW. R., and M. R. The co. is almost circular in form, and its surface shows a series of quiet and beautiful undulations. It is watered by the Wye, and its tributaries the Lugg and Monnow, also the Teme, which flows on the NE. boundary. All these streams are well stocked with fish. Agriculture has been greatly improved in the co.; the soil is peculiarly suitable for the growth of timber, which is very abundant. The pear and apple orchards of Herefordshire are famous; while the luxuriant meadowland affords pasture for a well-known breed of oxen. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Marl and clay form the chief part of the soil; the subsoil is mostly limestone. There are no valuable minerals, and the mfrs. are insignificant. The co. comprises 260 pars., the parl. and mun. bor. of Hereford (1 member), and the mun. bor. of Leominster. It is mostly in the diocese of Hereford. For parl. purposes it is divided into 2 divisions, viz., Northern or Leominster, and Southern or Ross, 1 member for each division.

Saturday. The "harts-ford" is supposed to be the origin of the name of this town, which during the Saxon era was a place of no little importance. On several occasions it was reduced by the Danes. Of the castle built by Edward the Elder very little now remains, the site being occupied by a private residence. The industries of the town are unimportant, but there is a considerable trade in agricultural products, the corn market being one of the largest in Britain. Two m. SE. of the town is HAILEYBURY COLLEGE: which see.

Hertfordshire, or Herts, an inland co. in SE. of England, bounded N. by Cambridgeshire, E. by Essex, S. by Middlesex, W. by Bucks, and NW. by Bedfordshire; greatest length, NE. and SW., 39 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 37 miles; admin. co., 404,518 ac., pop. 258,423. In appearance the co. is hilly, but interspersed with fine pasture lands, arable farms, and picturesque parks and woods. The Lea, the Colne, and the Ivel are the principal rivers; the Grand Junction Canal likewise passes through a part of the co. A large number of the inhabitants are employed in husbandry, and in addition to grain of choice quality, hay, vegetables, and numerous fruits and flowers are extensively cultivated, especially for the London market. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The greater portion of the commerce of the co. is supported by corn and malt. Mfrs. are few; paper-making, silk-weaving, and straw-plaiting being the principal industries. The co. is served by the G. N. R., M. R., L. & NW. R., G. E. R., and partly by the Met. Ry. Geologically the greater part of Herts consists of Lower, Middle, and Upper Chalk; in the S. is the London clay. The minerals are of no commercial importance. Herts comprises 158 pars., and the mun. bors. of Hertford, Hemel Hempstead, and St. Albans. It is almost entirely in the diocese of St. Albans. For parl. purposes it is divided into 4 divisions, viz., Northern or Hitchin, Eastern or Hertford, Mid or St. Albans, and Western or Watford, 1 member for each.

Highlands, generally speaking, that portion of the mainland of Scotland on and beyond the Grampians, in which the population is (or was) mainly Celtic, and the language Gaelic. The imaginary line between the Highlands and the Lowlands has commonly been regarded as commencing at the mouth of the river Nairn (at Nairn, on the Moray Firth); it runs thence SE. to the Dee (at Dinnet, 4 miles W. of Aboyne, Aberdeenshire); thence S. to the West Water (a headstream of the North Esk, Forfarshire); and thence SW. to the Clyde at Ardmore opposite Greenock. Some parts of this district, however (notably Caithness), are not marked by the usual physical features of the Highlands.

The parliamentary constituency comprises 17,078 electors. Market day, Tuesday. Huddersfield is mentioned in Domesday Book as Odersfield. In so far as its rise to eminence in mfrs. is concerned, it is wholly a modern town, and its prosperity may be dated from the beginning of the last century. It is the chief centre of the branch of mfr. known as the fancy woollen trade, but every description of plain and fancy woollen goods is manufactured: broadcloths, doeskins, beavers, trouserings, &c. Worsted, silk, and cotton are also worked into an endless variety of dress stuffs. Ironfounding is carried on, as well as mfrs. of steam-engines, boilers, and machinery; the latter being in a large measure such as is required in textile mfrs. Public buildings include the Town Hall and Borough Court, Market Hall, and Municipal Offices, Free Library, and Art Gallery. Beaumont Park is a beautifully laid-out open-air space. The Council controls the electric lighting, gas, waterworks, and tramways. Collieries and quarries are in the neighbourhood. The town is situated on the slope of a hill in the valley of the Colne, and the river is navigable for barges. Huddersfield was enfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832, and returns 1 member to Parliament.

The parliamentary constituency comprises 40,257 voters. Market days, Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday. Hull received its charter from Edward I., but, under the name of Wyke, was a place of some consequence long before the reign of that monarch. The refusal in 1642 of the governor, Sir John Hotham, to yield the town to Charles I., marked the commencement of the civil war. The marked progress and prosperity of the town in recent times may be attributed to the opening of docks, of which the chief are the St. Andrew's, Albert, Humber, Princes, Queen, Alexandra, and Victoria docks. Through the great maritime enterprise of the inhabitants, Hull has become one of the largest ports of the United Kingdom, amongst which it ranks third, having shipping commerce with all parts of the world. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Regular lines of steamers ply between the town and the chief ports of the Continent. Sea-fishing is very extensively prosecuted by an immense fleet of trawlers and drifters belonging to the port. The other industries of Hull comprise shipbuilding, rope and sail works, chemical works, mfrs. of oil, paint, and colours, flax and cotton mills, engineering works, breweries, foundries, &c. The principal exports are cotton, wool, hides, oil, metals, machinery, and caoutchouc. There is a fine Town Hall and many other handsome and large public buildings. Holy Trinity Church is one of the largest parish churches in England. The Corporation controls the free libraries, public baths, electric lighting, tramways, and cemeteries; the crematorium here was the first in the country maintained by a municipality. The East Park, West Park, and Pearson Park are open-air spaces, besides which there are several recreation grounds. Near the docks is a monument to William Wilberforce (1759-1833), the philanthropist, who was a native. For parliamentary purposes the bor. is divided into 3 divisions—East, Central, and West—each returning 1 member; the representation was increased from 2 to 3 members in 1885, when the parliamentary limits were extended.—2. Huntingdon.—mun. bor. and co. town of Huntingdonshire with ry. stas., G. N. R., M. R., G. N. & G. E. Jt. R., on left bank of river Ouse (which connects it with the port of Lynn), 17½ miles S. of Peterborough and 59 N. of London; 1074 ac., pop. 4261. Market day, Saturday; is the Huntantun of the Saxons. The Roman road, Ermine Street, passes through the town, which is connected with Godmanchester by a bridge. Huntingdon has breweries, carriage works, and mfrs. of patent perforated bricks; while there is also a considerable trade in agricultural produce, seeds, wool, and timber. Famous nurseries for trees, shrubs, flowers, and plants of every description are in the neighbourhood. Huntingdon was the birthplace of Henry of Huntingdon, the historian, and of Oliver Cromwell (1599–1658). It received its charter from King John and returned 1 member to Parliament until 1885. — 2. Huntingdonshire, Huntingdon, or Hunts, inland co., South Midland District, England; is bounded W. and N. by Northamptonshire, E. by Cambridgeshire, and S. by Bedfordshire; greatest length, N. and S., 28 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 23 miles; admin. co., 233,984 ac., pop. 54,125; the parliamentary constitution comprises 12,202 electors. H. is served by the G. N. R., G. N. & G. E. Jt. R., and M. R. About a fourth of the co. (in the NE.) forms a portion of the great "fen" district, the remainder consisting of a succession of gentle hills and dales. Huntingdonshire is almost wholly devoid of trees, and may be described as an agricultural and pastoral co. Scientific farming has greatly stimulated the productiveness of the soil, and the arable farms of the upland districts are peculiarly noted for superior grain. Green crops, also of excellent quality, are obtained, while market gardening and cattle rearing form profitable employments. Willows are the chief product of the fen district. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The Nen, in the N. and NW., and the Ouse, in the interior, are the chief rivers; both are navigable for barges. The geology of Huntingdonshire belongs to the Oolite system: many fossils are found, and the hills on the W. abound with stone brash, or forest marble. With the exception of papermaking and the preparation of parchment, there are no mfrs. of more than local importance. The co. is almost entirely in the diocese of Ely. It contains 105 pars., the mun. bors. of Huntingdon, Godmanchester, and St. Ives. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., Huntingdon or Southern, and Ramsey or Northern—each returning 1 member.

The parliamentary constituency contains 4372 electors. Market days, Tuesday and Friday. Large vessels can unload at the quays, and a considerable trade in sheep, wool, and agricultural produce is carried on with Aberdeen, Leith, and London by way of the Moray Firth, and with Glasgow, Liverpool, and Ireland by way of the Caledonian Canal. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Inverness is the headquarters of the H. Ry. Company, and their workshops here give employment to many of the inhabitants. The annual Highland athletic gathering known as the Northern Meeting takes place here in September and attracts large numbers of visitors. The industries are varied, though not extensive; they include shipbuilding, iron-founding, and the mfr. of woollen cloth. At Millburn, outside the burgh, is a distillery. Inverness has several good schools and handsome public buildings; among the former is the academy, incorporated by royal charter in 1792, and liberally endowed; among the latter are the episcopal cathedral of St. Andrew (Decorated Gothic), erected in 1866, and the Town Hall. There are extensive barracks about one mile from the town, Inverness being the regimental depôt of the King's Own Cameron Highlanders; in front of the railway station is a monument erected in 1893 to the memory of the officers and men of this regiment who fell in the Egyptian campaign (1882–87). The site of the old castle is now occupied by the county buildings, a fine castellated structure containing the court-house and jail. On the N. side of the town are some remains of the fort erected by Cromwell. Inverness is a place of great antiquity. It was one of the Pictish capitals; was made a royal burgh by William the Lion; was sacked by Donald of the Isles in 1411; was visited by James I. (who is said to have held a Parliament at Inverness) in 1427, and by Queen Mary in 1562; was taken by Cromwell in 1649; and was destroyed by Prince Charles Edward Stuart in 1746. The Inverness District of Parliamentary Burghs (consisting of Inverness in Inverness-shire, Nairn in Nairnshire, Forres in Elginshire, and Fortrose in Ross and Cromarty) returns 1 member.

Inverness-shire, maritime co. in NW. of Scotland; is bounded N. by Ross and Cromarty and the Inner Moray Firth, NE. by Nairnshire and Elginshire, E. by Banffshire and Aberdeenshire, SE. by Perthshire, S. by Argyllshire, and W. by the Atlantic; area, 4211 sq. m. or 2,695,037 ac. Civ. co., pop. 90,104 or 21 persons to each sq. mile; admin. co., pop. 68,619. The parliamentary constituency contains 9850 electors. Inverness-shire is the largest county in Scotland. It consists of 2 portions, insular and mainland. The insular portion embraces the island of Skye, the St. Kilda group, and the whole chain of the Outer Hebrides, except Lewis. (See HEBRIDES.) The mainland portion—intersected NE. and SW. by Glen More nan Albin and the Caledonian Canal—consists almost entirely of mountain, loch, and glen. Ben Nevis (4406 ft.), in the SW., at Fort William, is the highest mountain in Great Britain. The principal lochs are Loch Ness, Loch Arkaig, Loch Oich, Loch Lochy, Loch Laggan, and Loch Ericht, Loch Garry, and Loch Quoich. The W. coast is indented by Loch Hourn, Loch Nevis, and Loch Moidart. The principal rivers are the Spey, the Ness, and the Beauly, on all of which are valuable salmon fisheries. With the exception of the northern seaboard, the glens contain nearly all the fertile land, and only a small proportion of the total acreage is under tillage, all the rest being wood and forest, heath, and stony waste. The prevailing industry is sheep farming; there are some distilleries. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The county is largely under deer forests, and there are numerous moors and shootings, upon which game of all sorts is abundant. Inverness-shire is traversed by military roads (constructed in the 18th century), by the Caledonian Canal, and in the N. and E. by the Highland Ry. Gaelic is very generally spoken. The county (insular and mainland) contains 33 pars. and part of one other; the parl. and royal burgh of Inverness (part of Inverness Burghs—1 member), and police burghs of Fort William and Kingussie. It returns 1 mem. to Parliament.

Iona, island, quoad sacra par., and vil., with pier, Kilfinichen and Kilvickeon par., Inner Hebrides, Argyllshire—island (3½ miles by 1½ mile), 8 miles S. of Staffa and off SW. coast of Mull, from which it is separated by the Sound of Iona, about 1 mile wide; pop. 213; quoad sacra par. (including part of Mull), pop. 562; vil., on E. side of island, 6 miles W. of Bunessan; P.O., T.O. The inhabitants are engaged in crofting and fishing. Iona is also called "Icolmkill" ("island of the church of Columba") or simply "I." It derives its interest wholly from its ancient ecclesiastical remains, popularly attributed to St. Columba, who landed at Iona in 563, and erected a monastery; this, from 795 to 986, was exposed to the ravages of the Danes. A new monastery, as well as a nunnery, was founded by the Benedictines in 1203, and the remains are chiefly of that date. They consist of the cathedral church of St. Mary, the nunnery, several small chapels, a building called the Bishop's House, and 2 fine crosses (St. Martin's and Maclean's). The chapel of St. Oran is supposed to date from the 11th century; the burying-ground attached to it, said to contain the remains of many Scottish, four Irish, and eight Norwegian kings, possesses a great number of monumental stones. On the west side of the island are remains of a building known as the Cell of the Culdees; the latter was the name given to the disciples of Columba. The ruins were repaired and partially restored in 1874-5 by the late Duke of Argyll (the proprietor of the island), who presented them in 1899 to the Church of Scotland.

Market day, Tuesday. Ipswich is a quaint and ancient town, its name being a corruption of the old English Gypeswic or Gippeswic, meaning a city on the Gipping. It is on the left bank of that river, which here enters the estuary of the Orwell. The harbour, which is of increasing importance, has an area of 33 ac., and is entered from the Orwell by a lock 300 ft. long. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal mfrs. are ironwork for railway purposes, agricultural implements, and artificial manures. The free library has in connection with it a school of science and art and a museum. There are public baths and two open air bathing places, a public park, barracks, a grammar school, and an arboretum which consists of two pleasure grounds. Nearly all the public buildings are of modern date, but in the old town there are some curious specimens of ancient domestic architecture, notably the Sparrowes House (1567), Archdeacon's Place (1471), and Wolsey's Gateway (1528). Cardinal Wolsey (1471-1530) was a native. David Garrick made his first appearance on the stage in Ipswich, and some of the scenes in Dickens's "Pickwick Papers" are laid here. The bor. returns 2 members to Parliament.

Islay, island, Argyllshire, 13 miles W. of Kintyre and on W. side of Sound of Islay, by which it is separated from Jura; greatest length, 25 miles; greatest breadth, 19 miles; pop. 6857; P.O., T.O. (at Bowmore, Bridgend, Port Ellen, Portaskaig). Islay is the most southern and, except Skye, the largest island of the Inner Hebrides. Loch Indail, on the S., and Loch Gruinnard, on the N., convert the W. portion into a great peninsula; the coast is generally low; the interior is not mountainous. A considerable portion of the surface is occupied by peat; nevertheless, Islay is the richest and most productive island of the Hebrides. Agriculture has made great progress, and great attention is given to dairy farming and the rearing of horses, cattle, and sheep. The farms are generally large. The only industry not connected with the land is distilling. There are 9 distilleries. There is regular steamboat communication with Glasgow. There are harbours, with quay or pier, at Portaskaig, Sound of Islay; Port Ellen, SE. coast; Bowmore and Port Charlotte, Loch Indail; and Portnahaven, SW. coast of island, near Rhinns Point. There are lighthouses on Rudha Mhail, N. point of island; Macarthur Head, S. end of Islay Sound; Oversay island, Rhinns of Islay; Dun Point and Carraig Fada Point, Port Ellen; there is a light-vessel off the Otter Rock, 5 m. SE. of Port Ellen. The island is divided into the 3 pars. of Kilarrow and Kilmeny, Kilchoman, and Kildalton. Islay was long in the possession of the Scandinavians; it became the principal residence of the Macdonalds, Lords of the Isles; and it passed, early in the 17th century, from the Macleans to the Campbells, and afterwards to the Morrisons, the present holders.

Venerable Bede (673-735), and the scene of his labours. He was buried here, but the remains were removed to Durham Cathedral. It was a station of the Romans. A monastery, of which the ruins are still to be seen, was founded here in 680. The church of St. Paul, on the site of the old church, was restored in 1866. Jarrow is one of the Tyne ports, and has commodious docks, extensive shipbuilding yards, marine engine works, chemical works, paper mills, and foundries. There are lead, copper, and cement works, and coal mines in the vicinity. The Corporation maintains a hospital for infectious diseases, quays, and recreation grounds. Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. The mun. burgh includes the suburbs of Richmond Row and Bongate. Jedburgh (popularly called Jethart, and anciently Jedworth, the "town on the Jed") is the centre of business for a large extent of surrounding country, and one of the (earliest) seats of the woollen mfr. in Scotland, the chief articles being tweeds and blankets; it has also an iron foundry, engineering works, &c. Jedburgh is an ancient place, dating, it is said, from the 9th century; it was a favourite residence of the Scoto-Saxon kings; in their time and afterwards it was the chief town on the Middle Marches, and one of the centres of Border warfare. The abbey, one of the finest ecclesiastical ruins in Scotland, founded by David I. in 1118, was restored by the late Marquis of Lothian, who also erected the parish church (1875) to leave the abbey, which was previously used, unmodernised. No trace remains of the ancient castle destroyed in 1409; its site is occupied by the buildings which used to form the county jail. The houses still exist in which lodged Mary Queen of Scots (1566), Prince Charles Edward Stuart (1745), Burns (1787), and Wordsworth (1803). Sir David Brewster (1781–1868), the scientific writer, was a native, and James Thomson (1700–1748), the poet, received his early education at the old grammar-school. Jedburgh formed one of the Haddington District of Parl. Burghs, which returned 1 member until 1885.

Jersey, the largest and most important of the Channel Islands, 15 miles N. of the French coast, 17 SE. of Guernsey and 88 m. SE. of Portland Bill; area 28,717 ac., pop. 52,576. Jersey is the most southerly of this group of islands, and is oblong in form; greatest length, E. to W., 12 miles; greatest breadth, N. to S., 7½ miles; circumference about 40 miles. In the N. the appearance of the island is rugged and precipitous, the cliffs rising sheer from the sea. Towards the S. and E. the land slopes, and terminates in fine stretches of shore. The interior may be described as beautifully wooded table-land, comprising many lovely valleys, and watered by a number of small streams. Numerous bays indent the coast, the principal one being St. Aubin's on the S. side; small rocky islets abound on the N. Not much corn is grown, but potatoes are very largely cultivated, and are exported in enormous quantities. There are extensive apple orchards, while fruit growing is on the increase. On the coast the fisheries are successfully prosecuted. St. Helier is the chief town, and there is regular communication by steamer with both England and France. Kent, an important maritime county in SE. of England, bounded N. by the Thames and the North Sea, NW. by co. London, E. and SE. by the Strait of Dover, S. by the English Channel, SW. by Sussex, and W. by Surrey; greatest length, W. to E., 65 miles; greatest breadth, N. to S., 35 miles; 976,881 ac., pop. 961,139. The parliamentary constituency contains 114,396 electors. The co. is served by the SE. & C. R. The surface of the co. is hilly, being traversed E. and W. by the North Downs, a chalk range from 3 to 6 miles in breadth. On the N., along the shores of the Thames and Medway, there is a belt of marsh land, which extends over a mile inland. The greater portion of the seaboard is washed by tidal water. Besides the Thames and Medway, the chief rivers are the Stour and the Darent. The soil is varied and highly cultivated, more especially in the valley of the Medway. All classes of cereals and root produce are abundant, as is also fruit of choice quality, and more hops are grown in Kent than in all the rest of England. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The woods are extensive. The mfrs. include paper, gunpowder and explosives, pottery, Tunbridge ware, &c. The Government works and dockyards at Chatham, Sheerness, &c., employ an immense number of the inhabitants. Fishing is extensively prosecuted along the coast and in the estuaries of the rivers Thames and Medway, of which the oyster beds are especially famous. Historically Kent has greater associations than any other co. in England. The co. contains 427 pars., the parl. and co. bor. of Canterbury, the parl. and mun. bors. of Chatham, Dover, Gravesend, Hythe, Maidstone, and Rochester, and the mun. bors. of Deal, Faversham, Folkestone, Lydd, Margate, New Romney, Queenborough, Ramsgate, Sandwich, Tenterden, and Tunbridge Wells. It is almost entirely in the dioceses of Canterbury and Rochester. For parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 8 divisions—viz., Western or Sevenoaks, North-Western or Dartford, South-Western or Tonbridge, Mid or Medway, North-Eastern or Faversham, Eastern or St. Augustine's, Southern or Ashford, and Isle of Thanet, 1 member for each division; the representation of the co. was increased from 6 to 8 members in 1885.

Kerry, maritime co., in the SW. of Munster province, Ireland; is bounded N. by the Shannon, which separates it from co. Clare, E. by cos. Limerick and Cork, S. by co. Cork, and W. by the Atlantic Ocean; greatest length, NE. and SW., 67 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 55 miles; area, 1,189,787 (32,802 water), or 5.7 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 165,726, of whom 160,511 or 96.9 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 4431 or 2.7 Episcopalians, 220 or 0.1 Presbyterians, and 355 or 0.2 Methodists. The parliamentary constituency contains 23,242 electors. On the Atlantic coast, which is prevailingly bold and rocky, are the bays of Tralee, Dingle, Ballinskelligs, and Kenmare. The principal headlands from N. to S. are Kerry Head, Brandon Head, Slea Head, Bray Head, and Bolus Head. The largest islands are Valencia and the Blasket group. The greater part of the surface is bleak and mountainous, but there is also much romantic scenery. The principal summits are Carrantuohill or Carn Tual (3414 ft.), in the range of Macgillicuddy's Reeks, the loftiest mountains in Ireland; Brandon, 3127 ft., and Mangerton, 2756 ft. The lakes are numerous, but mostly of small size; the principal are the celebrated Lakes of Killarney. None of the numerous rivers is of great length. There are several medicinal springs. Slate and flagstone are quarried in Valencia. The chief crops are potatoes, oats, and turnips, but agriculture is not flourishing. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The coast fisheries are extensive, and give employment to a large number of men and boys. The co. is served by the G. S. & W. R. and by the Ballybunion and Listowel Ry. There is direct railway communication from Tralee and Killarney to Cork and Limerick. Kerry gives the titles of baron and earl to the Marquis of Lansdowne. The co. comprises 85 pars. and parts of two others, the towns of Tralee, Killarney, Listowel, Cahirciveen, Kenmare, and Dingle. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 4 divisions—viz., North Kerry, West Kerry, South Kerry, and East Kerry, 1 member for each division; its representation was increased from 2 to 4 members in 1885.

Kew, par. (wholly in Surrey) and vil., on r. Thames, at boundary with Middlesex, opposite Brentford (with which it is connected by a bridge), in mun. bor. of Richmond and 6 miles from Hyde Park Corner, London; 297 ac., pop. 2699; P.O., T.O. Kew has a special celebrity, due to its Royal Botanic Gardens and Arboretum. The gardens cover over 300 acres and were originated by George III. and his gardener, the well-known William Acton, in 1760. They contain the collections of Captain Cook and Sir Joseph Banks, and are said to show the finest collection of exotic plants in the world. In 1840, Queen Victoria, by presentation, made the gardens a national property. The herbarium is the largest in the world, and there are tropical and other hot houses, museums, fernhouses, a library, and a gallery of paintings of plants—the latter being presented by Miss M. North in 1882. The Pagoda at the S. end of the gardens may be seen for miles around. Kew is one of the great suburban attractions of London; the gardens are free to the public every day after 1 P.M. and are maintained by a parliamentary grant. In Kew Palace Queen Charlotte died (1818), and Queen's Cottage was a private residence of the late Queen. The late Duke of Cambridge and the late Duke and Duchess of Teck, parents of the Princess of Wales, lived at Kew. Gainsborough (1727-88), the painter, is buried in Kew churchyard. The vil., on river Thames, is in cos. Surrey and Middlesex, with ry. sta. (Kew Bridge), L. & SW. R. A great modern part of the vil. is on the Middlesex side of the river and in the urb. dists. of Brentford and Chiswick; the two parts are joined by a bridge, opposite the foot of which (Middlesex side) is an important vegetable and flower market owned by the Brentford district council. The name K. Bridge is used to distinguish the Middlesex part of the village from the Surrey (or K. Green) portion.

Kildare.—inland co. of Leinster province, Ireland; is bounded N. by co. Meath, E. by cos. Dublin and Wicklow, S. by co. Carlow, and W. by Queen's and King's cos.; greatest length, N. and S., 41 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 28 miles; average breadth, 15 miles; area, 418,496 ac., or 2 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 63,566, of whom 54,863 or 86.3 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 7392 or 11.6 Episcopalians, 688 or 1.1 Presbyterians, and 419 or 0.7 Methodists. The parliamentary constituency contains 18,761 electors. The surface is mostly flat, and there is much excellent land, both arable and pasture. The NW. division of the co. belongs to the Bog of Allen. Much of the soil consists of a fine, dry loam, on a sandy bottom. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Fine marble is quarried to the W. of the town of Kildare. The rivers are the Liffey in the NE., the Boyne on the NW. border, and the Barrow on the W. The co. is traversed by the Grand Canal and its branches, by the Royal Canal on the N. border, and by the lines of the Great Southern and Western and the Midland Great Western railways. Agriculture is the chief industry; cotton, woollens, and paper are manufactured to a limited extent. Among the antiquities there are 5 of the round towers which are so peculiar to Ireland. The co. comprises 107 pars. and parts of 5 others, and the towns of Athy, Naas, Newbridge, Maynooth, and Kildare (the capital). For parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Kildare and South Kildare, 1 member for each division.—2. Kilkenny.—inland co., in SW. of Leinster province, Ireland; is bounded N. by Queen's co., E. by cos. Carlow and Wexford, S. by co. Waterford, and W. by co. Tipperary; greatest length, N. and S., 45 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 24 miles; average breadth, 19 miles; area, 511,775 ac. (3105 water), pop. 79,159, of whom 74,830 or 94.5 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 3978 or 5.0 Episcopalians, 170 or 0.2 Presbyterians, and 114 or 0.2 Methodists. The parliamentary constituency contains 10,529 electors. The county is served entirely by the G. S. & W. R. The greater part of the co. is hilly, but there is little land unfit for tillage, or which does not yield good pasture. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The river Nore flows southwards through the middle of the co., the Barrow forms the E. boundary for about three-fourths of its entire length, and the Suir traces the whole of S. border; these rivers are navigable for considerable distances. Anthracite coal is worked in the neighbourhood of Castlecomer; and near the town of Kilkenny there are quarries of black and white marble. Limestone is abundant; manganese, copper, lead, and potter's clay also occur. There are mfrs. of flour, beer, whisky, and leather. The occupations are chiefly agricultural. The co. comprises 124 pars. and 16 parts of others, the parl. and mun. bor. of Kilkenny (1 member) and Callan. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Kilkenny and South Kilkenny, 1 member for each division.—2. Kilkenny ("church of St. Kenny," or "Canice"), parl. and mun. bor. with ry. sta., G. S. & W. R., and capital of co. Kilkenny, on river Nore, 80 miles SW. of Dublin by rail—parl. bor., 17,012 ac., pop. 13,242; mun. bor., 921 ac., pop. 10,609. The parliamentary constituency contains 1517 electors. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. It is divided into two parts by the rivulet Bregen, the Irish town and the English town; the former contains the Protestant cathedral of St. Canice, built in the 13th century, and restored at a cost of over £15,000 during 1865-70. Near it is the palace of the Bishop of Ossory. The Roman Catholic cathedral was consecrated in 1857. At the grammar school, Swift, Congreve, Berkeley, and Magee (Archbishop of York) were educated. Other buildings include the court-house, monasteries, convents, lunatic asylum, &c. The woollen mfr. is almost extinct, but there is a considerable trade in corn. On the Nore, 2 miles S., are extensive mills for the cutting and polishing of black marble. Brewing is also carried on. Kilkenny Castle, now the residence of the Marquis of Ormonde, is situated on the summit of a precipice overhanging the river Nore. It was formerly a fortress of great strength, and was besieged and taken by Cromwell in 1650. The bor. returns 1 member to Parl.

The town, from the great length of its main street, is known as the "Lang Toun." Kirkcaldy was made a burgh of regality in 1334, holding of the abbots of Dunfermline, and a royal burgh in 1450, but almost the only relic of antiquity is the tower of the parish church. The principal architectural ornament of the town is St. Brycedale Free Church (1881); it is in the Early English style, and has a fine spire 210 ft. high. Kirkcaldy is the principal centre in the kingdom of the linoleum and waxcloth industry, and has mfrs. of cloth, &c.; it has also machine works, potteries, &c. The shipping trade has undergone many fluctuations, but the improvements and extensions of the harbour are expected to give it a character of greater stability. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Kirkcaldy has numerous ecclesiastical, educational, and literary institutions, including 2 public libraries; there is an electric tramway system. The Beveridge Public Park was presented by a late Provost of the town. Adam Smith (1723-1790), author of the "Wealth of Nations," was a native. The parliamentary burgh of Kirkcaldy was extended in 1885, so as to include so much of the municipal burgh as is not comprised within the parliamentary burgh of Dysart. The Kirkcaldy District of Parliamentary Burghs (Kirkcaldy, Burntisland, Dysart, and Kinghorn) returns 1 member.

Kirkcudbright, parl., royal, and mun. burgh, par., and co. town of Kirkcudbrightshire, with ry. sta., G. & SW. R.; par., 12,275 ac., pop. 3309; parl. burgh, mun. burgh, royal burgh, and town, on river Dee, at its influx into Kirkcudbright Bay, 30 miles SW. of Dumfries by rail, pop. 2386; P.O., T.O. Market day, Friday. Kirkcudbright, long a burgh of regality, was made a royal burgh in 1455. Its antiquities are numerous—vestiges of an ancient castle of the Lords of Galloway, visited by Edward I., James II., Henry VI., and James IV.; the ruins of a castle built (1528) by Sir Thomas Maclellan of Bombie, ancestor of the Lords Kirkcudbright; the site of a monastery of the Grey Friars; and the old Court-house and Jail, a quaint edifice of the 16th century, now partly used as a fire engine station and a volunteer drill hall and armoury. In front of this building is the ancient market cross. Kirkcudbright has almost no mfrs., and its trade is purely local. Its harbour (Kirkcudbright Bay) is the most spacious, most accessible, and safest in the S. of Scotland, but owing to the ebb of the tide it is suitable only for small vessels, and the commerce is confined to the coast. On Little Ross island, at the mouth of the bay, is a lighthouse 65 ft. high, 175 ft. above high water, with flashing light (Little Ross) seen 18 miles; there is a lifeboat sta. Kirkcudbright is one of the Dumfries District of Parl. Burghs, which returns 1 member.

Kirkcudbrightshire, maritime co. in S. of Scotland; is bounded NW. by Ayrshire, NE. by Dumfriesshire, SE. by the Solway Firth, and SW. by Wigtownshire; greatest length, NW. and SE., 46 miles; greatest breadth, NE. and SW., 31 miles; 899.3 sq. m., or 575,565 ac.; civ. co., pop. 37,353, or 44 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 36,573; the parliamentary constituency contains 5810 electors. Kirkcudbrightshire is also known as the "Stewartry of Kirkcudbright" and "East Galloway." The coast line, which extends, in semicircular form, from the head of Wigtown Bay to the mouth of the Nith, a distance of 45 miles, is in general bold and precipitous, but is broken by the estuaries of the Nith, the Urr, the Dee, the Fleet, and the Cree, which form natural harbours, the principal seaports being Kirkcudbright, Gatehouse-of-Fleet, and Creetown. The county is served by the G. & SW. R. and Portpatrick and Wigtownshire Jt. Ry. In the NW. the co. is mountainous, with deep glens, and numerous small lochs; in the SE.—except in the extreme SE. corner—it is for the most part level but undulating. The chief heights include Mount Merrick, 2764 ft., Corserine, 2668 ft., Carlin's Cairn, 2650 ft., &c. The county is noted for the quality of its honey. Most of the soil in the higher regions is moorland and marsh; in the lower it is better suited for grass and green crops than for grain; great attention is paid to the rearing of cattle and sheep, the former including the well-known polled Galloway breed, and the latter Southdowns and Cheviots. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Granite is quarried, and lead, iron, and copper exist, but are little worked. Deep-sea fishing is carried on in the Solway Firth, and salmon-fishing at the mouths of the rivers, especially the Dee and the Urr. The co. contains 28 pars., the parliamentary and royal burgh of Kirkcudbright (part of the Dumfries Burghs), the royal burgh of New Galloway, and the police burghs of Castle Douglas, Dalbeattie, Gatehouse, and Maxwelltown. Kirkcudbrightshire returns 1 member to Parliament.

Lanarkshire, inland co. in SW. of Scotland; is bounded N. by Dumbartonshire and Stirlingshire, E. by Linlithgowshire, Edinburghshire, and Peeblesshire, S. by Dumfriesshire, and W. by Ayrshire and Renfrewshire; greatest length, NW. and SE., 50 miles; greatest breadth, NE. and SW., 33 miles; area, 897.4 sq. m., or 562,821 ac.; civ. co., pop. 1,339,327, or 1523 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 464,173. The co. is served by the N. B. R. and C. R. Lanarkshire is often called Clydesdale (which see), occupying as it does the valley of the Clyde, which traverses the county from SE. to NW., and receives numerous tributary streams, including the Douglas, Avon, and Calder. The surface rises towards the S., where the Lowther or Lead Hills reach an alt. of 2403 ft. The Upper Ward is chiefly hill or moorland, affording excellent pasture for sheep; the Middle Ward contains the orchards for which Clydesdale has long been famous; and in the Lower Ward are some rich alluvial lands along the Clyde; but all over the county a considerable proportion of the soil is moist, marshy, and barren. Dairy-farming is prosecuted with success. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The minerals are very valuable; coal and iron are wrought to such an extent that Lanarkshire is one of the principal seats of the iron trade, while more than half the coal raised in Scotland comes from this county; lead is mined in the Upper Ward. The co. comprises 41 pars. and 2 parts, the parl. and mun. bor. of Glasgow (7 members, and Glasgow University, with that of Aberdeen, 1 member), the parl. and police burghs of Airdrie, Hamilton, and Lanark (part of the Falkirk Burghs), the parl. and police burgh of Rutherglen (part of the Kilmarnock Burghs), and the police burghs of Biggar, Govan, Motherwell, Partick, and Wishaw. For parl. purposes it is divided into 6 divisions—viz., Govan, Partick, North-Western, North-Eastern, Mid, and Southern, 1 member for each division. The representation of Lanarkshire was increased from 2 to 6 members in 1885.

Lancashire, or Lancaster, co. palatine and maritime shire in NW. of England, bounded N. by Westmorland and Cumberland, E. by Yorkshire, S. by Cheshire, and W. by the Irish Sea; greatest length, 76 miles; greatest breadth, 45 miles; area of admin. co., including 15 co. bors., 1,196,753 ac., pop. 4,387,043. The parliamentary constituency contains 335,693 electors. The detached part of the co., known as Furness, is separated from the main portion by Morecambe Bay and a part of Westmorland co. The co. is served by the L. & Y. R., L. & NW. R., C. L. C. R., G. C. R., M. R., and Garstang and Knot-End Ry. The coast line of Lancashire is very irregular, the chief inlets being Morecambe Bay and the estuaries of the Mersey and the Ribble. Towards the shore, which comprises great stretches of sand, the land has generally a flat appearance. In the N. and E. it becomes more elevated, but the chief heights are in Furness, where an alt. of 2633 ft. is reached at Coniston Old Man. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Ribble, Lune, Wyre, Winster, and Leven. Peat prevails in the soil of the upland districts, while much of the low lying land consists of a rich loam. The chief crops are oats, wheat, and potatoes. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Carboniferous limestone abounds in the N. part of the co.; on the coast is the old red sandstone. The great coalfield of Lancashire, the existence of which has greatly contributed towards establishing its pre-eminence as a manufacturing co., covers an area of about 400 sq. miles between the Ribble and the Mersey. Iron is abundant in Furness, which is also noted for its shipbuilding. Lancashire is intersected by an intricate network of canals and railways. Its immense cotton mfrs. have a world-wide fame, while other textile fabrics are largely produced. Its mfrs. of machinery of all descriptions are also extensive. Slate and paving-stone are quarried, stoneware clay and fireclay are worked, while brine is pumped for the mfr. of salt near Fleetwood; other industries include alkali works, glass, candle, soap, and oil works. Lancashire comprises 405 pars., the co. bor. of Bootle, the parl. and co. bors. of Barrow in Furness (1 member), Blackburn, Bolton (2 members each), Burnley, Bury (1 member each), Liverpool (9 members), Manchester (6 members), Salford (3 members), Oldham, Preston (2 members each), Rochdale, St. Helens, Wigan (1 member each), the greater part of the parl. and co. bor. of Warrington (1 member), and of the parl. and mun. bor. of Ashton under Lyne (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Accrington, Bacup, Blackpool, Chorley, Clitheroe, Colne, Darwen, Eccles, Haslingden, Heywood, Lancaster, Leigh, Middleton, Mossley, Nelson, Rawtenstall, Southport, and Widnes. It is almost entirely comprised in the dioceses of Liverpool, Manchester, Carlisle, and Ripon. For parl. purposes the co. is divided into 23 divisions, each division returning one member—North Lancashire, 4 divisions, viz., North Lonsdale, Lancaster, Blackpool, and Chorley; North-East Lancashire, 4 divisions, viz., Darwen, Clitheroe, Accrington, and Rossendale; South-East Lancashire, 8 divisions, viz., Westhoughton, Heywood, Middleton, Radcliffe cum Farnworth, Eccles, Stretford, Gorton, and Prestwich; South-West Lancashire, 7 divisions, viz., Southport, Ormskirk, Bootle, Widnes, Newton, Ince, and Leigh. The representation of Lancashire was increased from 8 to 23 members in 1885.

Lancaster has a picturesque and pleasant situation on the acclivities of a hill, which is crowned by the Castle (now the co. gaol), said to have been erected on the site of the Roman castrum. In 1698 the town was nearly destroyed by fire; it also suffered during the risings of 1715 and 1745. The accumulation of sand in the river has made the port inaccessible for large vessels, but there is a dock at Glasson, 5 miles distant, where ships usually transfer their cargoes to lighters. There is canal connection with Preston and Kendal. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The industries comprise the mfr. of cabinet furniture, fancy oilcloths for table-covers, &c., cotton and silk goods, railway plant, and machinery. The water supply is derived from the Wyresdale Hills.
